

Activities

Mark A. Boyer, professor, department of political science, University of Connecticut, has been named editor of International Studies Perspectives. The journal is published by the International Studies Association.

William Jacoby, professor of political science, University of South Carolina, has been named editor of the Journal of Politics. The JOP is the quarterly journal of the Southern Political Science Association.

Michael J. Malbin, professor of political science, University at Albany, SUNY and Anthony Corrado, professor of government, Colby College, recently launched The Campaign Finance Institute. Malbin will serve as executive director and Corrado as co-chair.

Ellis Sandoz, Hermann Moyse Jr. Distinguished Professor of Political Science, and director, the Voegelin Institute for American Renaissance Studies, Louisiana State University, has been named 2000-01 president of the Philadelphia Society.

Administrative Appointments

Lawrence S. Graham, associate vice president for international programs, department of government, University of Texas, Austin. He has just completed a five-year assignment to organize and institutionalize the Brazil Center at UT-Austin.

Michael Harris, interim associate vice president of academic affairs, Eastern Michigan University.

Margaret G. Herman, professor of political science, and Jeff Straussman, professor of public administration, have been appointed co-directors of the Global Affairs Institute at Syracuse University.

Samuel B. Hoff, chair, department of history, political science, and philosophy, University of Delaware. Hoff has also been awarded the university's Faculty Excellence Award for University and Community Service.

Daniel A. Mazmanian, dean, School of Policy, Planning, and Development, University of Southern California.

Jerome M. Mileur, chair, department of political science, University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

Lela Noble, acting provost, San Jose State University.

Rosemary O'Leary, interim director, Alan K. Campbell Institute for Public Affairs, Syracuse University.

Marion Orr, chair, department of political science, Brown University.

Barry Rabe, interim dean, School of Natural Resources and Environment, University of Michigan.

Samory Rashid, associate provost, Roosevelt University; formerly, Indiana State University.

Bert A. Rockman, director, School of Public Policy and Management, and professor, department of political science, Ohio State University; formerly, University of Pittsburgh.

William R. Shaffer, chair, department of political science, Purdue University.

Shalendra Sharma, chair, Masters in Asia-Pacific Studies Program, University of San Francisco.

Stephen J. Silvia, director, Doctoral Studies, School of International Service, American University.

Stephen K. White, chair, department of political science, Virginia Tech. White is also editor of the journal Political Theory.

FOR THE RECORD

From the Mayor's Office

Typically, political scientists advise mayors. But that wasn't enough for Mamie E. Locke. She wanted to take on the job of tackling school funding and bringing in new business dollars herself. Locke, dean of the School of Liberal Arts and Education and professor of political science at Hampton University, was recently elected Mayor of Hampton, Virginia (pop. 140,000), becoming the first popularly elected woman and the first African American to hold the post. She has previously served as a member of the city council and, most recently, as vice mayor.

A long-time active member of the Association, she has served as an APSA council member, member of the PS editorial board, member of the 1993 APSA program committee, and board member and secretary of the Organized Section on Women and Politics. Locke received her B.A. in history and political science from Tougaloo College and her M.A. and Ph.D. in political science from Atlanta University.

New Appointments

Jean Abshire, assistant professor of political science, Indiana University, Southeast; formerly, Wayne State University.

Moises Arce, assistant professor, department of political science, Louisiana State University.

Samuel Best, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Connecticut; formerly, Notre Dame University.

Barbara Burrell, associate professor of political science and associate director, Public Opinion Laboratory, Northern Illinois University.

Christopher J. Carmen, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Pittsburgh.

Jose Chieub, assistant professor, department of political science, Yale University.

Keith Darden, assistant professor, department of political science, Yale University.

Patricia Goff, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Utah.

Kenneth Goldstein, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Wisconsin, Madison; formerly, Arizona State University.

Andrea Grove, assistant professor of political science, Westminster College (PA).

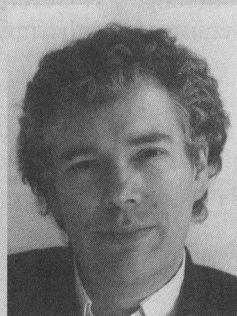

Ange-Marie Hancock, assistant professor, department of politics, University of San Francisco.

Michael Hannahan, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

William Howell, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Wisconsin, Madison.

Gregory Huber, assistant professor, department of political science, Yale University.

Ruth Berins Collier, professor of political science at the University of California, Berkeley, was recently named editor of the journal Studies in Comparative International Development. SCID is an interdisciplinary journal that addresses issues concerning political, social, and economic change in national, comparative, and international contexts.

Darrell M. West, professor of political science at Brown University, has been named director of the Taubman Center for Public Policy at Brown. West has also been named to the John Hazen White Chair in Political Science and Public Policy. His current research focuses on campaign finance, the history of mass media, and television advertising in election campaigns.

Cathy Cohen, a faculty member at Yale University, has been promoted to professor in the department of political science. A scholar of American politics, her research interests include African-American politics, women and politics, lesbian and gay politics, social movements, and urban politics. Her most recent book is The Boundaries of Blackness: AIDS and the Breakdown of Black Politics.

David A. Caputo has been elected the sixth president of Pace University. Caputo leaves Hunter College, where he had served as president since 1995. As a faculty member at Purdue University for over 25 years, he held many positions, the last being dean of the School of Liberal Arts. An accomplished scholar, with a recent focus on urban governance, Caputo received his Ph.D. in political science from Yale University in 1970.

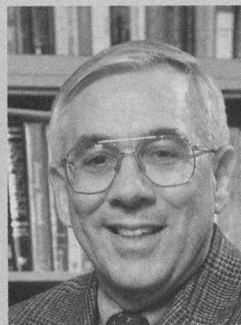

Shinju Fujihira has joined the department of political science at Tufts University as an assistant professor, where he will teach courses in comparative politics of Western Europe, Japanese politics, and comparative political economy. Fujihira moves to Tufts from Harvard University, where he recently had a John M. Olin National Security Fellowship at the Weatherhead Center for International Affairs. He completed his doctoral work at Princeton University.

Ian S. Lustick, professor of political science at the University of Pennsylvania, has received a two-year grant from the Carnegie Corporation to study the relationship between globalization and the resurgence of identity politics. The project uses an agent-based computer program—the ABIR (Agent-Based Identity Repertoire) model, developed at Penn in cooperation with Dr. Vladimir Dergachev—to explore many of the relationships hypothesized to exist between these two phenomena. Lustick also serves as associate director of Solomon Asch Center for Study of Ethnopolitical Conflict at Penn.

Marianne Githens of Goucher College has been named the institution's Elizabeth Conolly Todd Distinguished Professor. Githens, a member of the Goucher faculty for 35 years, is a professor of political science and director of the women's studies program. The Todd Professorship is a five-year appointment to "further the pursuit of scholarly endeavors."

Paul Allen Beck, professor and chair of political science at Ohio State University recently received the university's Faculty Award for Distinguished University Service. The award honors faculty who have made extensive contributions to the development and implementation of university policies and programs through nonadministrative roles. A University of Michigan Ph.D., Beck joined the OSU faculty in 1987 following service at Florida State University and the University of Pittsburgh.

Barbara Burrell has joined the faculty at Northern Illinois University as an associate professor. Burrell will also serve as associate director of the NIU's Public Opinion Laboratory. Burrell comes to NIU from the University of Wisconsin where she worked at the Wisconsin Survey Center.

Matthew Holden Jr., the Henry L. and Grace Doherty Professor of Government at the University of Virginia, delivered the inaugural Lent Upson Lecture in Public Administration at Wayne State University as part of the observance of the 65th anniversary of the founding of the school's graduate program in public administration. Holden served on the Wayne State faculty during the 1960s. He spoke on "Public Management and Ethnic Diversity," basing his remarks on one of the principal themes of his 1996 book, Continuity and Disruption: Essays in Public Administration.

Avis Jone-DeWeever, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Richmond.

Matthias Kaelberer, assistant professor of political science, Iowa State University; formerly, University of Northern Iowa.

Anatassios Kalandrakis, assistant professor, department of political science, Yale University.

Amy E. Kneedler, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Connecticut.

Marcus J. Kurtz, assistant professor, department of political science, Ohio State University; formerly, University of Miami.

Daniel Levin, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Utah.

Tamar R. London, postdoctoral fellow in political science, Penn State University; formerly, University of Rochester.

Ellen Lust-Okar, assistant professor, department of political science, Yale University.

Melanie Manion, assistant professor, department of political science and LaFollette School of Public Affairs, University of Wisconsin, Madison; formerly, University of Rochester.

Jonanne Miller, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Connecticut.

Massimo Morelli, assistant professor, department of economics and department of political science, Ohio State University; formerly, University of Minnesota and Iowa State University.

John Mueller, Hayes Chair in Security Studies, the Mershon Center, and professor, department of political science, Ohio State University; formerly, University of Rochester.

Diana C. Mutz, professor, department of political science and School of Journalism and Communication, Ohio State University; formerly, Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences and University of Wisconsin, Madison.

Christine Nemacheck, assistant professor, department of political science, Iowa State University.

Jon Pevehouse, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Wisconsin, Madison.

Jennifer Pitts, assistant professor, department of political science, Yale University.

Leonard Paul Ray, assistant professor, department of political science, Louisiana State University.

John Roemer, professor, department of political science, Yale University.

Kenneth Scheve, assistant professor, department of political science, Yale University.

Katherine Cramer Walsh, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Wisconsin, Madison.

Inger Weibust, assistant professor of political science, Iowa State University; formerly, Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

David Weimer, professor, department of political science and LaFollette School of Public Affairs, University of Wisconsin, Madison; formerly, University of Rochester.

Jason Wittenberg, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Wisconsin, Madison.

Promotions

Arun Agrawal, associate professor, department of political science, Yale University.

Lawrence Baum, Distinguished Professor of Social and Behavioral Sciences, Ohio State University.

Mark A. Boyer, professor, department of political science, University of Connecticut.

James Brent, associate professor with tenure, department of political science, San Jose State University.

Gregory A. Caldeira, Distinguished University Professor and University

Chaired Professor of Political Science, Ohio State University.

Edward S. Cohen, associate professor of political science with tenure, Westminster College (PA).

Gary W. Copeland, professor, department of political science, University of Oklahoma.

Sharyl Cross, professor, department of political science, San Jose State University.

Mark J. Gasiorowski, professor, department of political science, Louisiana State University.

Allan Gerber, associate professor, department of political science, Yale University.

Lauren H. Holland, professor, department of political science, University of Utah.

Steven G. Koven, professor of urban policy, department of urban and public affairs, University of Louisville.

John Kuzenski, associate professor with tenure, The Citadel.

Edward D. Mansfield, professor, department of political science, Ohio State University.

Kathleen M. Moore, associate professor with tenure, department of political science, University of Connecticut.

Jos C.N. Raadschelders, Henry Bellmon Chair of Public Service, department of political science, University of Oklahoma.

Mark J. Schafer, associate professor with tenure, department of political science, Louisiana State University.

Allan Stam, associate professor, department of political science, Yale University.

Thomas Lyke Thompson, professor, department of political science and College of Urban, Labor and Metropolitan Affairs, Wayne State University.

Stephen Zunes, associate professor with tenure, department of politics, University of San Francisco.

Alan F. Zundel, associate professor with tenure, department of political science, University of Nevada, Las Vegas.

Retirements

David Apter, professor, department of political science, Yale University.

Karl F. Johnson, professor emeritus, L.P. Cookingham Institute of Public Affairs, University of Missouri, Kansas City.

Henry Krisch, professor of political science, University of Connecticut, Storrs.

Frederick J. Roberts, professor, department of political science, Illinois State University.

Rudolf L. Tökés, emeritus professor, department of political science, University of Connecticut.

H. Bradford Westerfield, professor, department of political science, Yale University.

Visiting and Temporary Positions

Cynthia Boaz, visiting assistant professor, department of politics, University of San Francisco.

Richard Cole, visiting assistant professor, department of political science, University of Connecticut.

M. Kent Jennings, professor of political science, University of California, Santa Barbara, spent the 1999-2000 academic year at Arizona State University as the Goldwater Professor of American Institutions. During his year at ASU, Jennings gave a number of public addresses based on his political socialization research, team-taught a course and conducted a survey on presidential

Pendleton Herring

Honoring a Career of Distinguished Service

Pendleton Herring, a long-time member and former president of the American Political Science Association, was recently honored with the Woodrow Wilson Award for Distinguished Government Service by his alma mater, Johns Hopkins University. The honor befits a man who, 40 years after leaving Johns Hopkins, became president of a foundation honoring the only U.S. president to earn a doctorate degree and serve as APSA president, also from the Johns Hopkins University department of political science—Woodrow Wilson.

The Wilson Award is intended to honor alumni who have brought credit to Johns Hopkins by their current or recently concluded distinguished service to the public as elected or appointed officials. Herring received the award as part of the 2000 reunion festivities at Hopkins in April.

Herring was born in Baltimore and attended Johns Hopkins as both an undergraduate and graduate student, earning his doctorate in political science in 1928.

Herring left Hopkins to teach at Harvard's Graduate School of Public Administration, with which he enjoyed an 18-year association. During that time and into the early 1950s, he also served as a consultant in the Roosevelt and Truman administrations in Washington, including the War Department, Bureau of the Budget, the Navy, and Central Statistics Board. During 1946–47 he was the director of the Atomic Energy Group of the United Nations. From 1948 through 1968, he served as president of the Social Science Research Council, an independent, not-for-profit, international association devoted to the advancement of interdisciplinary research in the social sciences. During his tenure at SSRC, the institution increased its visibility as a bridge-builder among universities, foundations, and government, and among researchers, practitioners, and policymakers.

After leaving the SSRC, Herring started yet another career as president of the Foreign Area Fellowship Council. In 1962 he also became president of the Woodrow Wilson Foundation, a position he held until 1994. He has been bestowed with honorary degrees from Harvard University, Princeton University, and Johns Hopkins.

A scholar of American politics, Herring has published numerous articles and books, including Group Representation Before Congress (1929, 1967), The Politics of Democracy (1940, 1966), and Public Administration and the Public Interest (1936, 1967).

Pendleton Herring has long been an active member and generous benefactor of the Association, joining APSA in 1927. He served as vice president in 1945–46 and was elected APSA president for 1952–53. He has served on various Association committees and panels over the past 70 years. The walls of the Association's national headquarters now hold one of Herring's significant contributions to APSA. The Pendleton Herring Print Collection made up over 50 individual pieces, serves as an expression of "Political Institutions and Behavior as Represented in Art." The collection includes numerous works by William Hogarth and George Caleb Bingham, as well as political cartoons from Puck.

In 1997 Herring was honored with the Association's Frank J. Goodnow Award, which recognizes significant contributions to the political science profession and the APSA. Goodnow himself was the third president of Johns Hopkins University as well as the first president of APSA.

primaries with Kenneth Goldstein, and met with students in other political science classes.

Glenn H. Palmer, visiting associate professor of political science, Penn State University; formerly, Texas A&M University.

Antonio L. Rappa, National University of Singapore, visiting scholar, Institute of Governmental Studies, University of California, Berkeley from May 15-31, 2000. He then served as a visiting scholar (Hewlett Program) at RAND, Santa Monica, during the months of June and July. He is currently completing two year's of ethnographic fieldwork on the Eurasians.

Awards

Carnegie Corporation Names First Class of Carnegie Scholars

Four APSA members were among the first class of 12 Carnegie Scholars named earlier this year. The program supports innovative scholarship and policy-focused research in education, international development, democracy, and international peace and security. The Corporation plans to name up to 20 Carnegie Scholars annually, each for periods of up to two years. The awards represent the first time in 30 years that the foundation is supporting individual research.

Stephen Ansolabehere, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, "The Rise of Money in American Elections."

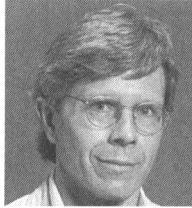

Matthew Evangelista, Cornell University, "Will Russia Go the Way of the Soviet Union? Lessons from the Chechen Wars."

Michael Sandel, Harvard University, "What Money Can Buy: Markets, Morals, and Civic Life."

Ian Shapiro, Yale University, "Democracy and Distribution in the United States."

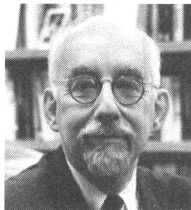

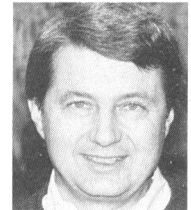

Political Scientists Elected to American Academy

On April 15, 2000, the Council of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences elected 154 new Fellows and 15 Foreign Honorary Members. Seven political scientists were among the group. The new members, chosen in recognition of their distinguished contributions to science, scholarship, public affairs, and the arts, will be inducted at a formal ceremony at the House of the Academy in October. Today, the Academy's rolls include 152 political scientists. Those elected in 2000 are:

David Austen-Smith, Cambridge University Professor, Northwestern University. Austen-Smith's teaching and research interests include positive political theory, social choice, and game theory. His work has appeared in the American Political Science Review and the American Journal of Political Science. He received his Ph.D. in 1978 from the Cambridge University.

Bruce E. Cain, Robson Professor of Political Science, University of California, Berkeley. In 1999 Cain was named the sixth director of Berkeley's Institute of Governmental Studies. He joined the faculty at Berkeley in 1989, after teaching at Cal Tech since 1976. A former Rhodes Scholar, he earned his Ph.D. from Harvard University in 1976.

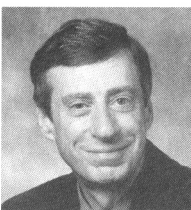

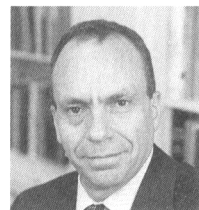

Ira Katznelson, Ruggles Professor of Political Science, Columbia University. A scholar of American politics whose work straddles comparative politics theory, Katznelson returned to Columbia in 1994, where he had been on faculty from 1969 to 1974. He has taught at the University of Chicago and New School for Social Science Research. He received his Ph.D. from Cambridge University in 1969.

Helen Milner, professor of political science, Columbia University. A scholar of international relations, Milner joined the faculty at Columbia in 1986, after completing her doctoral work at Harvard University. Her latest book, Interests, Institutions, and Information: Domestic Politics and International Relations lays out the first fully developed theory of domestic politics, showing exactly how domestic politics affects international outcomes.

David W. Rohde, University Distinguished Professor, and director of the Political Institutions and Public Policy Program, Michigan State University. A scholar of American politics with a focus on Congress and elections, Rohde earned his Ph.D. from the University of Rochester in 1971. He is the author of Parties and Leaders in the Postreform House.

Ian Shapiro, professor of political science Yale University. A scholar of political theory and philosophy, he is the author of The Evolution of Rights in Liberal Theory. He has been a fellow of the Guggenheim Foundation, the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences, and the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation. He currently serves as chair of the department.

James A. Stimson, Raymond Dawson Professor of Political Science, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. A scholar of American politics, his works include Public Policy in America: Moods, Cycles, and Swings, which was recently released in a second edition. He joined the faculty at Chapel Hill in 1977 after appointments to several other faculties. He earned his Ph.D. from UNC in 1970.

Society for Comparative Research Names 2000 Winners

The Society for Comparative Research recently named winners for its 2000 prizes. They included three political scientists. SCR is an international scholarly organization that brings together the most distinguished comparativist scholars from various disciplines, including political science, sociology, economics, history, and anthropology.

The Mattei Dogan Award for the Best Comparativist Book of the Year was presented to James Scott, Eugene Meyer Professor of Political Science, Yale University, for Seeing Like a State.

The Lipset Award for the Best Comparativist Dissertation of the Year was shared by Kathleen Collins, Stanford University, for "Clan Politics in Central Asia," and Lanny W. Martin, University of Rochester, for "Coalition, Politics and Parliamentary Government." Collins remains at Stanford University, while Martin has joined the faculty at the University of Houston.

Other Awards

Samuel H. Beer, Professor Emeritus, Harvard University, has been awarded the first Sir Isaiah Berlin prize by the Political Studies Association of the United Kingdom for his lifetime contribution to political studies.

John Bokina, professor, department of political science, University of Texas, Pan American, received a 2000 Fulbright German Studies Seminar for "History and Memory: Jewish Past and Present in Germany."

Meena Bose, department of political science, Hofstra University, has been selected for a time-in-residence grant at the James MacGregor Burns Academy of Leadership, University of Maryland. Bose will work on project titled "Cold War Leadership in the Reagan and Bush Administrations."

Mark A. Boyer, professor, department of political science, University of Connecticut, was named the 2000 recipient of the Rowman & Littlefield Award for Innovative Teaching in Political Science.

Walter Broadnax, dean, School of Public Affairs, American University, received the National Public Service Award from the American Society of Public Administration.

Matthew Burbank, department of political science, University of Utah, received the Superior Teaching Award of the College of Social and Behavioral Science.

Jeffrey S. Dixon, doctoral candidate in political science, Rice University, has received a National Science Foundation dissertation improvement grant to continue his work on "Capabilities, Costs, Intervention, and Civil War Outcomes."

Jean Bethke Elshtain, professor of political science, University of Chicago, has been named a fellow at the National Humanities Center for 2000-01. She will concentrate on a project titled "Sovereign God, Sovereign State, Sovereign Self."

Amy Fried, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Maine, has been awarded the John C. Donovan Prize, for the best paper presented at the 1999 New England Political Science Association's meeting. The paper, "The Strange Disappearance of Alexis de Tocqueville in the Social Capital Debate," discusses the split in the political science discipline between empirical social science researchers and political theorists, as demonstrated by discussions of Tocqueville in recent scholarship on citizens' civic values.

Michael M. Gunter, professor of political science, Tennessee Technological University, was awarded the Outstanding Faculty Award in Teaching prize at Tennessee Tech.

Jeanne Heffernan, department of government and international studies, University of Notre Dame, won the Alumni Association's Distinguished Graduate Student Award.

Jeremy Hunsinger, instructor of political science, Virginia Tech, was presented an Award for Excellence in Online Teaching by the Online Academy and E-Learning Design Lab of the Center for Research and Learning at the University of Kansas. These awards were instituted in 1999 by Paul Allen of Microsoft, and they recognize outstanding contributions to learning online, innovative approaches in program design, and excellence in teaching. This award recognizes Hunsinger's role in developing the Online Masters Program in Political Science at Virginia Tech. The competition is national in scope, and the awards were made during May 2000.

Patricia Ingraham, professor of public administration and political science, Syracuse University, has been awarded the first Herbert Simon Award for excellence in public administration research, given by the public administration section of the Midwest Political Science Association.

Pei-te Lien, department of political science, University of Utah, received the university's Superior Research Award of the College of Social and Behavioral Science.

Arend Lijphart, research professor of political science, University of California, San Diego, has been named a Phi Beta Kappa visiting scholar for 2000-01.

George Lopez, department of government and international studies, University of Notre Dame, received a grant from the Canadian Foreign Ministry to conduct a review of the UN's progress on sanctions reform during the year 2000.

Timothy W. Luke, University Distinguished Professor, department of political science, Virginia Tech, was presented an Award for Excellence in Online Teaching by the Online Academy and E-Learning Design Lab of the Center for Research and Learning at the University of Kansas. These awards were instituted in 1999 by Paul Allen of Microsoft, and they recognize outstanding contributions to learning online, innovative approaches in program design, and excellence in teaching. This award recognizes Luke's role in designing the Online Masters Program in Political Science at Virginia Tech as well his teaching accomplishments in the program since 1998.

A. James McAdams, professor and chair, department of government and international studies, University of Notre Dame, received Notre Dame's President's Award.

James McGuire, department of government, Wesleyan University, has been awarded two national fellowships to work on a book tentatively titled "Social Policy and Human Development in East Asia and Latin America." One is a residential fellowship at the Smithsonian Institution's Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars in Washington, DC, where he will spend the 2000-01 academic year. The other is a senior fellowship from the American Council of Learned Societies.

Martha Merritt, department of government and international studies,

University of Notre Dame, won a Kennan Research Scholarship from the Woodrow Wilson Center.

Brad Roth, assistant professor of political science and legal studies, Wayne State University, has received a 2000 Wayne State University Board of Governors Faculty Recognition Award. The award recognizes the publication of Roth's book, Governmental Illegitimacy in International Law (Oxford University Press, 1999). The BOG award carries with it a prize of $1,000. The book also was awarded a Certificate of Merit by The American Society of International Law as the "outstanding work in a specialized area."

Philip Schrodt, professor of political science, University of Kansas was awarded a W.T. Kemper Fellowship for Teaching Excellence. The fellowship recognizes outstanding teachers and advisers at KU. Schrodt specializes in foreign policy decision making, international conflict and crises forecasting, and quantitative international relations.

Peri Schwartz-Shea, department of political science, University of Utah, received a faculty fellowship and a Tanner Humanities Center Fellowship from the university to pursue her research on graduate training in methodology and epistemology.

Jeff Straussman, professor of public administration, Syracuse University, was named a Maxwell Professor of Teaching Excellence in recognition of his sustained contributions to the Maxwell School's students and teaching community.

Rudolf L. Tökés, was awarded the Presidential Gold Medal of Merit by Arpad Goncz, President of Hungary. Tökés was being honored and thanked for his assistance in facilitating the democratic transformation of Hungary.

Bruce Wallin, associate professor, department of political science, Northeastern University, was awarded one of only two university-wide Excellence in Teaching Awards for 1999-2000.

Stephen Zunes, associate professor, department of politics, University of San Francisco, received the College of Arts and Sciences Service Award for outstanding service contributions to the department, the university, and the community.