INJURIES TO TISSUES

LONG-CONTINUED suppurations, resulting from wounds and other injuries to the tissues, may be speedily overcome by general irradiation, in addition to local treatment.

Antiphlogistine Dressing, due to its ability to prolong hyperæmia, to its plasticity, which enables it to cling to any part of the body, and to its antiseptic and osmotic qualities, which help to overcome infection, raises the resistance of the patient, so that striking results in rapid healing are often obtained by this mode of treatment.
