

A Proposal to Literature Persons

To the Editor:

There are sociologists, economists, humanists, linguists, anthropologists, dramatists, psychologists, biologists, chemists, physicists, and zoologists; there are historians, physicians, musicians, politicians, statisticians, and mathematicians; there are historiographers and geographers; there are even writers and doctors, critics and architects. But what is the appellative for those of us who are the so-called experts in literature?

In a course that I am teaching with a sociologist and a dramatist, I am a "literature person." I move that we give ourselves a title. Any suggestions?

HANNAH BERLINER FISCHTHAL
Hofstra University