In 2004 Art Therapy Lab was created to investigate viability of team approach in art therapy in psychiatry. Five projects were carried out between 2004-2010. These projects were based on cooperation between medical professionals, professional artists and members of user organization. During these projects adherence to ethical regulations was assessed, ethical difficulties and dilemmas were noted and discussed. This paper will discuss main ethical problems that were relevant in those projects and provide recommendations on how to solve and prevent them.
