AFRICA CONFIDENTIAL

Now in its eleventh year of publication AFRICA CONFIDENTIAL is the fortnightly newsletter with a worldwide reputation for accurate and impartial reports on African political, economic and commercial affairs.

AFRICA CONFIDENTIAL is NOT a digest of already published material or just a series of commentaries, but contains original reports by our correspondents in the African capitals and elsewhere. These correspondents try wherever possible to dig behind the news and anticipate events. To make this difficult task easier we guarantee them anonymity so that they may write knowing they are free of political or commercial pressure.

That our reports are valuable is demonstrated by our steadily growing list of subscribers who include Heads of Government, business leaders, diplomats, academic experts, and most well known Africanists. That our reports are dispassionate is shown by the fact that we are read in Peking as well as Washington; in Pretoria as well as Dar es Salaam.

AFRICA CONFIDENTIAL is not on sale at bookstalls but is supplied direct to subscribers by mail.

Subscription rates payable in advance for one year (25 issues):

HOLY JOHNSON

Pioneer of African Nationalism, 1836–1917

E. A. AYANDELE

This new study demonstrates both the complexity and yet the binding unity underlining the efforts of Africans over the past two centuries. It is not merely a biography of one of the great nineteenth century Africans but is, more particularly, a study of one of the earlier phases of African Nationalism in which James Johnson played such a considerable role. Essential reading for imperial historians as well as everyone with any interest in Africa today.

MY LIFE AND THE ICU

The Autobiography of a Black Trade Unionist in South Africa
CLEMENTS KADALIE

Edited, with an introduction by Stanley Trapido

A remarkable figure in the history of African protest, Kadalie founded the first black trade union in South Africa, the Industrial and Commercial Workers' Union. Intelligent, versatile, tremendously energetic, he succeeded in building it up into a mass movement—and then, tragically, saw it disintegrate. His story is directly relevant to the position of black South Africans today.

The name of James Africanus Beale Horton stands pre-eminent among the varied array of first and second generation West African elite in the second half of the nineteenth century. The son of an ex-slave, Horton graduated in medicine from Edinburgh University, and gained the unprecedentedly high position of chief of the entire Army Medical Department in the Gold Coast. Author of many social, economic and political pamphlets relevant to both traditional societies and to the colonial states in West Africa, Horton's Letters marks the culmination of his life-long dedication to the African cause.

THE JOURNAL OF MODERN AFRICAN STUDIES

The Journal offers a quarterly survey of politics, economics, and related topics in contemporary Africa.

The main emphasis is upon the peoples and policies, the problems and progress of this dynamic and disparate continent; upon the many societies that are evolving rather than the essential characteristics of the old; upon the present, not on the more distant past. The best current work is sought from specialists in different academic disciplines, whose contributions can illuminate and cross-fertilise one another.

The Journal seeks to promote a deeper understanding of what is happening in Africa today. It is intended for both the political scientist and the practical politician, the administrator and the advocate, the economist and the educator, the banker and the businessman, the diplomat and the technocrat, the civil servant and the nationalist leader. All have something to contribute to these pages and, it is hoped, much to learn from them.

Editorial policy avoids commitment to any political viewpoint or ideology, whether imperialism, pan-Africanism, capitalism, socialism, or nationalism. Such concepts, however, have relevance to the modern African situation, and merit serious discussion, often from several different points of view, in order that controversial issues may be fairly examined.
