The Procedural Aspects of International Law Series

Just published—Volume V

THE PROTECTION OF FOREIGN INVESTMENT SIX PROCEDURAL STUDIES

Richard B. Lillich

In most instances today, Americans sustain extensive losses if their property abroad is confiscated. Protective and remedial measures are inadequate under international law and under the national system of protection developed to date by the United States.

This is the first systematic attempt to appraise promising existing protective measures and to assess their strengths and weaknesses in relation to the comprehensive program needed to protect private foreign investment.

Professor Lillich's fully documented findings and carefully considered recommendations for action deserve the closest attention in the courts and in Congress, by government officials, international lawyers, and private businessmen.

The Contents: Protection in Municipal Courts; Sovereign Immunity; Act of State.

Protection by the Government: The Hickenlooper Amendment; The Investment Guaranty Program.

Protection for the Future: Pre-adjudication of International Claims; A New Look at Old Problems.

The Rule of Law in European Integration

The Path of the Schuman Plan

by Stuart A. Scheingold

An exploration of the role of the Court of Justice shared by the Coal and Steel Community, Euratom, and the Common Market. New community institutions have had to regulate matters never before left to the decision of international agencies, and the issues they have brought to the Court are of fundamental significance to regional integration. The Court's responsibility not only to implement but to choose values to guide the integration process is explored in detail.

The International Law of Fisheries

by Douglas M. Johnston

To provide a framework for inquiry into the making of international policies regarding the use of fisheries that are or could be shared by two or more states, Mr. Johnston reassesses existing law from a functional point of view using the techniques of policy-oriented jurisprudence developed by Myres S. McDougal and associates.

RECENT DEVELOPMENTS IN THE LAW OF THE SEA AND THE JAPANESE-KOREAN FISHERY DISPUTE

GUENTER WEISSBERG

This timely volume is a must for those who are concerned with the Rule of Law and interested in the manner in which International Law develops to meet the challenges of the world community. Set against the background of the Japanese-Korean Fishery Dispute, Professor Weissberg has succinctly analyzed the current trends which have engulfed the Law of the Sea. Ranging from the Truman Proclamations on Fisheries and the Continental Shelf to the European Fisheries Convention, this book contains a wealth of material which has been examined from an historical and a juridical point of view. Should become as standard a tool in the area of International Law as the author's International Status of the United Nations has become in the field of International Organization.

A New Major Work

NATIONALIZATION AND COMPENSATION

by ISI FOIGHEL, professor, doctor juris

Contents:

Background—The Taking of Property Compensation—The Enforcement of the Claim for Compensation—The Distribution of Compensation.

344 pages

$10.-

This book is a continuation and enlargement of the author's earlier work on nationalization. It differs from the former not only quantitatively—an attempt having been made to bring the pertinent material up to date—but further several new problems have been taken up for discussion such as the practical questions of the protection of shareholders in foreign companies, concessions, the distribution of compensation etc.

"Foighel has chosen his time well for the publication of his study of Nationalization in its international aspects. His work excels by three qualities: detachment, lucidity and conciseness. It would be difficult to praise more highly the effort of any scholar."

YEAR BOOK OF WORLD AFFAIRS

"... a stimulating and interesting book ..."

THE SOLICITOR

"This is a book dealing with a wide range of problems which are both of theoretical and immediate practical interest. In its excursions into the past and the future it opens up wide fields of vision and gives an absorbing impression of the relationship of international law to economic and political influence in international life . . . there can be no doubt that this work is sure of an enduring place in the literature on a subject which will certainly continue to exercise many minds in the international discussion of the coming years . . ."

PROFESSOR, DR. JUR. MAX SOERENSEN

"This is a great and expert work which not only testifies to the author's tenacity and talent for research but also to his outstanding gifts for first-hand scientific work and to his sound judgment on legal problems based firmly on the realistic approach to law which is characteristic of Scandinavian jurisprudence."
