

Review of International Studies

Aims and Scope

The aim of the Review of International Studies is to promote the analysis and understanding of international relations. Its scope is wide-ranging both in terms of subject matter and method. The Review is designed to serve the needs of students and scholars interested in every aspect of international studies, including the political, economic, legal, historical, cultural, technological and ethical dimensions of the subject. It is receptive to the extensive array of methodologies now employed in the humanities and the social sciences and wishes to draw on the expertise of other disciplines, such as sociology and psychology, to throw light on the study of international relations. Each issue contains research papers on specialized topics and review articles on recent literature in a specific field.

The Review was established in 1975 as the British Journal of International Studies and it took its present title in 1981. It is the official journal of the British International Studies Association and is published quarterly in January, April, July and October.

The British International Studies Association

The British International Studies Association was established in 1975 to encourage the teaching and research of international studies in Britain and to promote contact with scholars working in this field in other countries. The Association holds an annual conference and organizes study groups which meet throughout the year. It has a close working relationship with similar organizations in other countries and has established links with the standing group for international relations in the European Consortium for Political Research. The Association publishes the Review of International Studies and a series of monographs on international relations with Cambridge University Press. Members of the Association receive a copy of each issue of the Review and a regular newsletter. Membership is open to individuals and institutions of any nationality and applications for membership of the Association should be sent to the Secretary, c/o the Editor of the Review.

The BISA Prize

The British International Studies Association has established the BISA Prize of £200 to be awarded annually for the best article published in that year's Review of International Studies. The judging will take place during the autumn of each year, and the prize will be awarded at the annual conference of BISA.

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

0260-2105(199601)22:1:1-X