Journal of the Society for American Music

Journal of the Society for American Music (JSAM) is an international, peer-reviewed journal that explores all aspects of American music and music in the Americas. JSAM is dedicated to supporting scholarship that transcends disciplinary boundaries, cutting across historical musicology, music theory, ethnomusicology, cultural theory, and American studies. JSAM encourages international dialogue across disciplines. The journal features articles, reviews of books, recordings, and multimedia items, and explorations of special topics.

Contributors

E. Douglas Bomberger is a professor of music at Elizabethtown College, where he teaches music history and piano. He is a specialist in music of the nineteenth century, having served as nineteenth-century area editor for the Grove Dictionary of American Music (Oxford, 2013). His biography of Edward MacDowell (Oxford, 2013) sheds new light on MacDowell's early years and places his compositions in the context of the turbulent late-century musical culture of Boston and New York.

Rachel Chacko is an assistant professor of music at Whitman College in Walla Walla, Washington. She specializes in the analysis of cross-cultural composition, especially with regard to the practices of twentieth-century U.S. composers. Her research on Lou Harrison's engagement with gamelan has been published in the Journal of the Society for American Music and American Music.

Jacqueline Cogdell DjeDje is a professor emeritus, former chair of the Department of Ethnomusicology, and former director of the Ethnomusicology Archive at the University of California, Los Angeles. Her research focuses on African and African American music, with specializations in fiddling and black music in California. In addition to articles in various scholarly journals and essay collections, she is the author of Fiddling in West Africa: Touching the Spirit and Fulbe, Hausa, and Dagbamba Cultures.

Maxine Fawcett-Yeske holds a Ph.D. in musicology from the University of Colorado at Boulder. She was an associate professor of music at Nebraska Wesleyan University in Lincoln for eleven years before accepting her current position as director of first-year programs and music professor at the United States Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs. She has published and presented extensively on the American fusing tune. Her most recent research focuses on the life and music of Olgivanna Lloyd Wright and on the pedagogy of academic advising.

Naomi Graber is a limited-term assistant professor at the University of Georgia. She completed her dissertation on Kurt Weill and the Great Depression in 2013 at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Her work on Weill's unfinished musical Ulysses Africanus is forthcoming in the Musical Quarterly. She is the inaugural recipient of the Rhonda A. and Robert Hillel Silver Graduate Fellowship of the Carolina Center for Jewish Studies and has received fellowships to study at the Arnold Schönberg Centre and the Library of Congress.

Eduardo Herrera is an assistant professor in ethnomusicology and music history at Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey. He specializes in contemporary musical practices across Latin America. His research has included Argentinean and Uruguayan avant-garde music, the history of electroacoustic music, and soccer chants and constructions of masculinity. Herrera is working on a book titled Elite Art Worlds: Philanthropy, Latin Americanism, and Avant-Garde Music.

Kenneth Kreitner is the Benjamin W. Rawlins Professor of Musicology at the University of Memphis, where he also directs the Collegium Musicum. He is the author of Discursing Sweet Music: Town Bands and Community Life in Turn-of-the-Century Pennsylvania (Illinois, 1990), The Church Music of Fifteenth-Century Spain (Boydell, 2004), and articles in Early Music, the Journal of the Royal Musical Association, Early Music History, Musica Disciplina, the Historic Brass Society Journal, and the Revista de Musicología.

James McNally is a doctoral candidate in ethnomusicology at the University of Michigan. His research investigates popular music in Brazil and the United States, with focuses on theories of race and ethnicity, gender and sexuality, media, nationalism, and cultural politics. He is currently conducting fieldwork for his dissertation, which examines experimental music practice in São Paulo, Brazil.

Andrea Moore is a doctoral candidate in the Department of Musicology at UCLA. She is completing a dissertation on the Bachakademie Stuttgart's "Passion 2000" commission, titled "Millennial Passions: New Music and the Ends of History, 1989–2001." A specialist in twentieth and twenty-first century music, she focuses especially on the post-Cold War period and issues of representation, prestige, and value. Other research areas include music and labor, minimalism, and East German musical politics.

Colin Roust is an assistant professor of musicology at the University of Kansas School of Music. He holds a Ph.D. from the University of Michigan, with specializations in twentieth-century music and film music. Roust is a co-editor of The Routledge Film Music Sourcebook, and his work has appeared in Music & Politics, The Musical Quarterly, Twentieth-Century Music, Ars Lyrica, and Music in Television (edited by James Deaville).

Brian C. Thompson is a senior lecturer at the Chinese University of Hong Kong, where he teaches courses on film music and Western music history. His work on music in nineteenth-century North America has appeared in JSAM and other publications. He is the author of Anthems and Minstrel Shows: The Life and Times of Calixa Lavallé (McGill-Queen's University Press, 2015). He is currently writing a book about the minstrel show performer James Unsworth, Jr.
