Remaking America

Public Memory, Commemoration, and Patriotism in the Twentieth Century

John Bodnar

In a compelling look at popular commemorative events—ranging from ethnic community fairs through Civil War reenactments to celebrations of our pioneer past—John Bodnar examines American public commemorations from the early nineteenth century to the present day.

Noting a strong tendency on the part of authorities to promote national patriotism through public commemorations, Bodnar finds that ordinary citizens want these events to reinforce personal sentiments and concerns—of class, race or ethnicity, sex, regional identity, and family. Remaking America is filled with the stories behind American celebrations and monuments as Bodnar charts the creation of “public memory” over the course of more than a century.

“The story that John Bodnar tells is fresh and original. His lens into the large, complex, and amorphous subject of public memory offers a close examination of the commemorative activities that Americans have undertaken on communal, regional, and national levels. This is an extremely valuable study that will be widely read.”—Roy Rosenzweig, George Mason University
