

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

SUSAN C. BARTH is a graduating senior at Northwestern University. She plans to pursue graduate studies in business administration.

BRENDA DANET is Director of the Communications Institute of Hebrew University of Jerusalem, and Senior Lecturer in Communications and Sociology. She directed a project on "Language in the Legal Process" in 1975-1977, while on leave from the Hebrew University and affiliated with Boston University. Her research interests are in sociolinguistics; language and the legal process; clients, organizations, and professions; and the uses and effectiveness of complaint-handling mechanisms.

ROY B. FLEMMING, Assistant Professor of Political Science at Wayne State University, received his Ph.D. from the University of Michigan in 1977. He is currently involved in a comparative study of felony dispositions in three states, funded by the National Institute of Justice.

KENNETH B. HOFFMAN, now in private law practice, was Director of the First Year Program at the Boston University School of Law. He served as Co-Principal Investigator with the project on "Language in the Legal Process."

HERBERT JACOB is Professor of Political Science and Urban Affairs at Northwestern University and President-Elect of the Law and Society Association. His most recent book is Crime and Justice in Urban America.

NICOLE C. KERMISH served as research assistant with the project on "Language in the Legal Process" at Boston University, and is a graduate of Boston University School of Law.

C. W. KOHFELD is Assistant Professor of Political Science and Research Fellow in the Center for Metropolitan Studies at the University of Missouri-St. Louis. Her fields of interest are public compliance, urban crime rates, and modelling dynamic political processes; and she has published articles on these topics.

GEORGE E. MARCUS, Associate Professor of Anthropology at Rice University, received his B.A. from Yale and Ph.D. from Harvard. He conducted field research among noble and commoner elites of the Pacific island kingdom of Tonga, and has now turned his attention to the social and cultural organization of wealthy families in complex societies.

MARTHA A. MYERS, Assistant Professor of Sociology at the University of Georgia, received her Ph.D. in 1977 from Indiana University. She is currently co-principal investigator for a National Institute of Justice study of sentencing in the state of Georgia.

ERIC D. POOLE is Assistant Professor of Sociology at Western Carolina University. He received his Ph.D. in Sociology from Washington State University in 1976. Since then he has been actively involved in several research projects and has had articles published in a variety of professional journals.

ROBERT M. REGOLI, Assistant Professor of Sociology at Texas Christian University, received his Ph.D. in Sociology from Washington State University in 1975. He has published numerous articles in professional journals and is the author of Police in America: A Study of Cynicism (1977).

ROBERT T. ROPER is Assistant Professor of Political Science at Southern Illinois University-Carbondale. His research interests include judicial behavior, administration of justice, and legal socialization. He has published in all of these areas and currently is researching the impact of mistrials and remands on the outcomes of criminal cases.

DOUGLAS ROSENTHAL received both a Ph.D. in Political Science and a Law Degree from Yale University. He was the Reporter for the recently published monograph of the American Law Institute-American Bar Association, A Model Lawyer Peer Review System (June, 1980). Formerly Chief of the Foreign Commerce Section of the Justice Department's Antitrust Division, he is now a member of the law firm of Sutherland, Asbill & Brennan in Washington, D.C.

THOMAS M. UHLMAN is Assistant Professor of Political Science and a Research Fellow in the Center for Metropolitan Studies at the University of Missouri-St. Louis. His articles have appeared in various social science journals, and he is author of Racial Justice.