
About the Authors

Christina Batjer is completing a Ph.D. in political science at the University of Utah. Her dissertation is on the military justice system.

Anthony G. Bower is Director, Pricing and Economic Analysis at SmithKline Beecham Pharmaceuticals, where he directs global pricing strategy and health economics projects. He is an economist by training. His research interests include pricing, contracts, and strategy development for pharmaceuticals. He was an Associate Economist at RAND in Santa Monica, California, before joining SmithKline Beecham.

Catherine Connolly is an Associate Professor of Sociology and Adjunct Associate Professor of Administration of Justice and of Women's Studies at the University of Wyoming. She is an attorney, licensed to practice in New York State. Her research interests include domestic violence, part-time work and workers, and sexuality and the law.

David M. Engel is Director of the Baldy Center for Law and Social Policy and Vice Dean for Interdisciplinary Studies at the Law School of the State University of New York at Buffalo. His current research explores changing concepts of injuries and law in northern Thailand and, with Frank Munger, law and life stories of individuals with disabilities in the United States. He was president of the Law & Society Association from 1997 to 1998.

Steven Garber is a Senior Economist at RAND in Santa Monica, California, and Co-Director of RAND's Center for Research on Health Care Organization, Economics and Finance. Most of his research examines economic effects of government policies aimed at changing business behavior and market-level outcomes. His work on product liability includes a 1993 RAND Institute for Civil Justice monograph, Product Liability and the Economics of Pharmaceuticals and Medical Devices. Before joining RAND in 1990, he spent ten years on the faculty of the graduate school of public policy at Carnegie Mellon University. He has also held faculty positions at the State University of New York at Buffalo and the University of Toronto.

Carol A. Heimer is Professor of Sociology at Northwestern University and Research Fellow, American Bar Foundation. She has recently published For the Sake of the Children: The Social Organization of Responsibility in the Hospital and the Home (with Lisa R. Staffen, University of Chicago Press, 1998) and has published on insurance, organization theory, the sociology of risk, and medical sociology. She is especially interested in what happens at the intersections of normative systems and is working on a book extending the arguments of her work on the social organization of responsibility in infant intensive care to other settings.

Phoebe A. Morgan is Professor of Criminal Justice at Northern Arizona University in Flagstaff Arizona. There, she serves as a prelaw advisor and teaches undergraduate and graduate courses about research, crime, justice, women, and law in American societies. She has published articles about sexual harassment in state government agencies, the power of sexual harassment law, male dominance and feminist resistance on the Internet, cultural diversity in the criminal justice classroom, and the crime victim/crime worker relationship. She cofounded the Sociologists Against Sexual Harassment electronic mail discussion list and currently maintains its web site. She is a member of the State Bar of Arizona's Gay and Lesbian Task Force.

Susan M. Olson is an Associate Professor and Chair of the Department of Political Science at the University of Utah. Her research interests focus on citizen mobilization of the legal system in the contexts of social reform litigation, ordinary civil litigation, and judicial elections. She has been especially interested in attorney-client relations and their effects on mobilization.

Mary E. Vogel is currently a Visiting Fellow at the Centre for Socio-Legal Studies, Oxford University, where she is at work on a book about the role of law in democratic state formation. She is a comparative historical sociologist and sociologist of law and has taught at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, at Northwestern University, and the State University of New York at Stony Brook. She is the author of a forthcoming volume on the origins of plea bargaining from the 1830s (Oxford).