SMUTS

THE SANGUINE YEARS

1870-1919

BY W. K. HANCOCK

Smuts stands with his friends Churchill and Gandhi in the front rank of world statesmen. Until the late 1940's the Union of South Africa bore his stamp; the British Commonwealth still bears it. International relations, first in the League and later in the United Nations, are saturated with his ideas. His view of the universe and man's place in it is shared by many. To understand Smuts, then, is to understand much about the hopes, fears, and facts of the modern world.

This first book of a two-part biography deals with the first fifty years of Smuts's life. It shows him as a student, a young attorney, a general, a rising statesman, and finally as Prime Minister of South Africa. Smuts's position and problems at Vereeniging; his determined quest for answers to the Briton-Boer feud; the private and public turmoils of his struggle with Gandhi; his growing despair as he saw the Treaty of Versailles take shape, 'not as a peace treaty but a war treaty': all these are acutely portrayed.

Sir Keith Hancock knows his subject. Since Smuts's death in 1950 he has directed the assembly of the Smuts Archive, a vast store of letters, diaries, papers and manuscripts. Here he uses this material to draw a remarkable portrait of a remarkable man.

Announcing

a New Volume in

MEDLICOTT'S HISTORY OF ENGLAND Series
(in ten volumes)

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY ENGLAND, 1714-1784
Dorothy Marshall, November, 1962, $7.50

Dr. Marshall presents a full narrative of political events within the social and economic framework. It contrasts and then weighs the personal interests of men like Walpole, Newcastle and Chatham against such impersonal forces as the growth of trade and industry. The outstanding merit of the book lies in making available and comprehensible the essence of the many detailed studies recently made on particular aspects of eighteenth century English history.

The Journal of Commonwealth Political Studies

THE JOURNAL is intended to fill a gap in the ranks of specialized scholarly journals. It will print articles and reviews on Commonwealth relations and on the politics and government of individual Commonwealth countries. While the emphasis will be on the Commonwealth as an association, and on its member-nations, there will also be articles on dependent territories, particularly in regard to movements towards self-government and relations with other parts of the Commonwealth.

A Plain Pathway to Plantations (1624)

By Richard Eburne Edited by Louis B. Wright

MINISTER of a parish church in England, Richard Eburne wrote the most carefully reasoned of the Jacobean treatises on colonization. His tract was not reprinted between its appearance in 1624 and this first modern edition. Perhaps because only a few copies of the book survived, it has been almost completely neglected by historians of British expansion.

By means of a dialogue between a merchant and a farmer, who debate the merits of colonies with remarkable wisdom but great clarity, Eburne presents his "doctrine" of plantations, based mainly on economic benefits to result both for the settlers in the colonies and for England.

The Complete Gentleman, The Truth of Our Times, and The Art of Living in London

By Henry Peacham Edited by Virgil B. Heltzel

HENRY PEACHAM is known as the author of The Complete Gentleman to many persons who have never read the work. Much esteemed and widely read by country gentlemen in England and America in the two centuries following its appearance in 1622, the book had a certain influence on the character of the English gentry as well as on later books of advice. Here it is printed with two of Peacham's less-known works, which give additional comments on such subjects as schools and schoolmasters, parents and children, and travel. Together the three works present Peacham's ideals for the country gentleman and his sensible and penetrating criticism of social conditions in his time.

NELSON'S HISTORY OF ENGLAND

A History in Eight Volumes

General Editors: Christopher Brooke, Professor of Medieval History, University of Liverpool and Denis Mack Smith,
Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge

THIS history covers the period from the first Roman invasion up to 1955 and presents the full sweep of history in its various aspects — constitutional, economic, social and cultural, and in the inter-relation between them. Four of the projected eight volumes are now available:

THE LATER MIDDLE AGES, 1272-1485 (Vol. III)

by George Holmes. This volume is divided into two parts: Part One (1272-1361) covers the development of the principles of the parliamentary system, the establishment of the universities, the conquest of Wales, the Scots War of Independence and the Hundred Years' War; Part Two expands the description of the 100-year French struggle, traces the origins of the Wars of the Roses, and continues the discussion of the changing character of medieval society. Illustrations, maps, diagrams, genealogical tables, bibliography and index. $4.50

THE CENTURY OF REVOLUTION, 1603-1714 (Vol. V)

by Christopher Hill. This volume presents a reassessment of "what happened" in a century of revolution at three levels — political, economic and religious. But it does much more. It penetrates below the surface of 17th-century events to show the emergence of modern English society — an England on the path of Parliamentary government, economic advance, scientific progress, religious toleration and imperialist foreign policy. "By no means the conventional textbook . . . this breathless survey of what is perhaps the most interesting era of English history."—Political Science Quarterly $6.25

MODERN BRITAIN, 1885-1955 (Vol. VIII)

by Henry Pelling. The author sets the events of modern British history against the background of the nation's external problems — world war, post-war retrenchment, depression and dwindling colonial influence.

FROM ALFRED TO HENRY III, 871-1272 (Vol. II)

by Christopher Brooke. Covers 400 years that produced extensive change, a period of emergence for the united English monarchy and more effectively organized government; monastic reform; and the changes in religious thought, politics and culture wrought by closer contact with European life. $5.00
