Christian Thought from Erasmus to Berdyaev

by Matthew Spinka, University of Chicago

CHRISTIAN THOUGHT FROM ERASMUS TO BERDYAEV describes the successive stages of an historical process stretching from the time of Erasmus through the Age of Reason into the modern period now witnessing the eclipse of humanism.

The study is based on lectures given over a fifteen-year period, which cover such significant subjects as Cartesianism and Lockean Empiricism. It deals lucidly with the Monism of Hegel, Immanuel Kant's Critiques of the philosophy of religion, and the existentialist theology of Søren Kierkegaard.

The volume manifests the contemporary ecumenical spirit by effectively integrating Eastern Orthodox thinking with Western theological thought. It gives more inclusive treatment than ever before to such outstanding figures as Vladimir Solovev and Feodor Dostoevsky, and places particular emphasis on the contributions of Nicholas Berdyaev, the Philosophy of Personalism.
