PROCESSES OF THE WORLD-SYSTEM

edited by Terence K. Hopkins and Immanuel Wallerstein,
State University of New York-Binghamton

Sponsored by the Political Economy of the World System Section of the American Sociological Association

Processes of the World-System takes three seemingly diverse areas of research within the broad spectrum of social science and historical research of the capitalist world-system and explores the many levels of interaction, relevance, and interplay between them. These areas include: (1) the theoretical place and interpretive importance of long waves or cycles to the functioning of the world-system; (2) the structural fluctuations between proletarianization and bourgeoisification within the system; and (3) the question of the singularity of the development processes of capitalism and implications for the study of the part-whole relationships in world-systems analysis.

CITIES OF PEASANTS

The Political Economy of Urbanization in the Third World

by BRYAN ROBERTS,
Professor of Sociology, University of Manchester

This book is about the expansion of capitalism in the Third World. It is one of the few accounts linking contemporary differences in the political and economic structure of underdeveloped countries to the historically specific way in which these have become part of the world economy. Focusing on the most securely capitalist of all underdeveloped regions of the continent of Latin America — the author traces the growth of urban-based industrialism and its impact, both externally and internally. He shows how it has transformed the economy and produced new political and social pressures, whose significance can be seen in the daily economic activities, social relationships and even religious behavior of people in Third-World cities. This analysis explains and uses the concepts of dependent development and core periphery: there is also a critical review of current theories about urbanization in the third world and, in particular, a discussion of the debate on marginality.

The nature of the urban working class in underdeveloped countries, with its potential for organization and collective aspirations, will be a crucial factor in the future. This book conveys both the flavor of life in the cities of the Third World and the immediacy of their problems.

THE GUIDE TO SIMULATIONS/GAMES FOR EDUCATION AND TRAINING 4th Edition

edited by Robert E. Horn and Anne Cleaves, both at Information Resources, Inc., Lexington, Massachusetts

Consisting of over 1100 separate simulation/game listings (about one-fourth of them new to this edition), the GUIDE provides information on each game's name, copyright, number and age level of players, structure and process (including any special equipment needed), cost, and location of the manufacturer. Listings have been restricted to those materials confirmed through the publishers as available, guaranteeing potential users a high rate of success in obtaining them. The simulations/games listed are within the low-to-moderate price range, and are for the most part suitable for ages from junior high through adult. The entries are cataloged within twenty-five academic and eight business sections, each with a list of cross-references to help readers use the categories rather than be restricted by them. This fourth edition is the most complete existing guide to simulations/games available for use in educational and business training settings. Unique to this edition are twenty-four essays evaluating and comparing simulations in a variety of subject areas, written by experts who have had firsthand experience with the material, in a format that will help prospective users identify and compare significant aspects of each simulation/game.

The GUIDE has been edited for the potential game user rather than for the theorist or designer. In short, it is a complete "consumers' report" on generally available simulations and games.

From reviews of previous editions:

"This is the all but indispensable source for finding the right game and knowing as much as possible about it before ordering."

—THE CENTER FOR WAR/PEACE STUDIES

"The guide ... promises to be the authoritative source of information on games."

KNOWLEDGE

Creation Diffusion
Utilization

EDITOR

ROBERT RICH, Princeton University

Individuals have tended to think of themselves as working, or at least concentrating, on knowledge creation, knowledge diffusion, or knowledge utilization. As a result, these three subfields of the study of knowledge have evolved independently of each other. KNOWLEDGE: CREATION DIFFUSION, UTILIZATION provides the first forum for communication among individuals in these divergent areas as well as a context in which to develop research, methodology, and practices which establish much-needed linkages between them.

Frequency: quarterly in March, June, September, and December
