

FROM ENLIGHTENMENT TO REVOLUTION

Eric Voegelin

Edited by John H. Hallowell

In this history of political ideas, Eric Voegelin analyzes the sentiments and experiences that, beginning in the eighteenth century, led to the modern doctrine of progress which contributed to the formation of the intellectual climate of opinion that made possible such twentieth-century totalitarian movements as National Socialism and Communism. "What starts out in the so-called Age of Enlightenment as nothing more formidable than a dream, even an absurd dream, turns out in the twentieth century to be a living nightmare," John H. Hallowell writes in his editor's preface. From Enlightenment to Revolution demonstrates how this came about.

WAR AND POLITICS IN CAMBODIA

A Communications Analysis

Sheldon W. Simon

"Using the technique of thematic analysis, the author has studied public statements of major parties to the Cambodian war and has attempted to measure the impact of the perceptions and attitudes of opposing factions upon the conduct and ultimate direction of that conflict. In general, his conclusions appear to flow logically from his data, and his summaries of the tortuous twists in Cambodian foreign policy and of the relations of Sihanouk's National Front to Hanoi and China are particularly well done . . . The study represents a useful model for the specialist and is a welcome addition to the sparse literature." Library Journal
