World Petroleum Arrangements 1985

Study by country of legislative and contractual requirements governing petroleum exploration and exploitation.

All countries of the world are included.

While each national review is necessarily brief, two to six pages in length, the texts contains extensive references which indicate sources for legislative reference and for English copies of the contracts and laws which constitute the legal corpus of petroleum's regulation.

There is a separate section that discusses the major types of arrangements used today for petroleum exploration and exploitation - namely, the concession, the production sharing contract the risk service contract, and the service contract. This section contains a financial results of using one of these major types of arrangements from the company and/or governmental point of view.

This new study represents a source for lawyers that is not possible to find elsewhere.

WORLD PETROLEUM ARRANGEMENTS, 1985 is available from BARROWS INC.

The Structure and Process of International Law

by Ronald St. J. Macdonald and Douglas M. Johnston, Dalhousie University, Canada
1242 pp. paper $75.00 cloth $120.00

"We have here between two covers an extraordinary sampling of the best thinking being done by international lawyers in the main power centers of the world, and anyone eager to keep up with the discipline can ill afford not to read his way through to the end." Richard Falk, The American Journal of International Law

"This book is useful to anyone concerned both in the nature of international law and in foreign affairs." The Times

"An incredibly valuable collection of original essays on international legal theory." Richard Falk, The American Journal of International Law

This book responds to three problems confronting international lawyers today — the fragmentation of their discipline, the tendency to view law as a craft rather than a science, and the lack of major theoretical works on the science of international law.
