

NEWS and ANNOUNCEMENTS

The papers of Harrington Emerson, early industrial engineer and efficiency expert, have been opened to researchers at the Historical Collections and Labor Archives, Pennsylvania State University. The papers span Emerson's career, 1895–1931, as a businessman, consultant, publicist, efficiency advocate, and founder of professional engineering societies, and contain twenty-five cubic feet of correspondence, publications, unpublished essays, industrial consulting reports, clippings, and memorabilia. Inquiries should be sent to the Historical Collections and Labor Archives, W313 Pattee Library, Pennsylvania State University, University Park, PA 16802.

The Alcohol and Temperance History Group seeks to foster the exchange of ideas among scholars of all disciplines who are interested in the history of alcohol use and its control. It pursues this goal by publishing the Social History of Alcohol Review semiannually and by sponsoring the discussion of alcohol and temperance history at scholarly meetings and conferences. Annual dues are $8 for individuals in North America and $10 for institutional and overseas memberships. Those interested in joining the group should contact Geoffrey J. Giles, Department of History, University of Florida, Gainesville, FL 32611.
