

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

RONALD BAYER studied political science at the University of Chicago and received his Ph.D. in 1976. He has done research in a drug abuse program and has been a postdoctoral fellow at the Department of Psychiatry, Albert Einstein College of Medicine and at the Institute of Society, Ethics, and the Life Sciences, Hastings-on-Hudson, New York. He is currently studying the decline of the rehabilitative ideology.

JONATHAN D. CASPER is an Associate Professor of Political Science at Stanford University. He received his Ph.D. from Yale in 1968. He is the author of American Criminal Justice: The Defendant's Perspective (Prentice-Hall, 1972), Lawyers Before the Warren Court (University of Illinois Press, 1972), and The Politics of Civil Liberties (Harper & Row, 1972). His research interests focus on criminal courts, and civil liberties and civil rights.

PATRICIA WARD CROWE is a doctoral candidate in anthropology at Stanford University. She is currently preparing her dissertation on social networks at different levels of urbanization in Tirol.

HOWARD S. ERLANGER, Associate Professor of Sociology at the University of Wisconsin, Madison, has been engaged in a series of studies of public interest lawyers, and of the legal profession generally, with colleagues at the Institute for Research on Poverty (Madison) and the American Bar Foundation. These include "Social Reform Organizations and the Subsequent Careers of Participants: A Follow-up Study of Early Participants in the OEO Legal Services Program" (42 American Sociological Review, 1977), Lawyers and the Pursuit of Legal Rights (with Joel Handler and Ellen Jane Hollingsworth, Academic Press, 1978), and forthcoming papers on the socialization effects of legal education and on stratification in the American legal profession.

JACK KATZ, a Research Associate at Yale Law School, received a J.D. from the University of Chicago Law School and a Ph.D. in sociology from Northwestern University. He is currently doing field research in a U.S. Attorney's office on differences in the prosecution of white-collar and blue-collar crimes.

NEIL O. LITTLEFIELD is a Professor of Law and Director of the Business Planning Program at the University of Denver College of Law. He has taught commercial and consumer law and has written extensively in legal journals. His interest in empirical legal research, stimulated by attending the third Social Science Methods in Legal Education (SSMILE) Institute in Denver in 1969, is combined with his concern for consumer law in the research project reported in this issue. Professor Littlefield holds an LL.B. degree from Boston University and the LL.M. and S.J.D. degrees from the University of Michigan.

H. LAURENCE ROSS is presently Director of the Program in Law and Social Sciences at the National Science Foundation, but will leave in September to become Professor of Sociology and Adjunct Professor of Law at the State University of New York at Buffalo. His research interests include investigation of the abilities and limitations of law to affect behavior, and the study of informal aspects of the legal system, including negotiation and arbitration of legal disputes.