

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

HAYWARD R. ALKER, JR., is a Professor of Political Science at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology who has published numerous articles and books on mathematical analysis of political and legal phenomena.

ERHARD BLANKENBURG is a Research Fellow at the Wissenschaftszentrum in Berlin where he is conducting a comparative study on public administration and a study on legal aid in West Germany. He teaches law as a Privatdozent affiliated with the University of Freiburg. He has published books on the police (Definitionsmacht der Polizei, Düsseldorf, 1973), and on the civil courts (Strukturanalyse der Zivilgerichtsbarkeit, Tübingen, 1974), and is coauthor of a forthcoming study on state prosecutors.

LEO CARROLL is an Assistant Professor of Sociology at the University of Rhode Island. His current research includes an investigation of the demographic, socioeconomic, and deterrent correlates of rates of criminal victimization. He is also investigating the correlates of expenditures for policing.

STEVENS CLARKE, Associate Professor of Public Law and Government at the Institute of Government, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, received an A.B. in Mathematics from Harvard University in 1958 and an LL.B. from Columbia Law School in 1966. His present work includes teaching law to correction and law enforcement officers, research in correctional law, and drafting legislation on sentencing for the North Carolina General Assembly. His past criminal justice research includes studies of bail risk, determinants of prison sentences, and the incidence of juvenile delinquency. He is presently engaged in statistical studies of juvenile court disposition in North Carolina and plea bargaining and sentencing in Alaska.

JANE F. COLLIER, Assistant Professor of Anthropology at Stanford University, is the author of Law and Social Change in Zinacantan. She is currently working on a cross-cultural study of the relationship between social stratification and legal processes.

CARL HOSTICKA received his Ph.D. in Political Science from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and is now on the Faculty of Law and Jurisprudence at the State University of New York at Buffalo.

GARY KOCH, Professor of Biostatistics at the School of Public Health, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, received a B.S. in Mathematics (1962) and an M.S. in Industrial Engineering (1963) from Ohio State University, and a Ph.D. in Statistics (1968) from the University of North Carolina. He is a fellow of the American Statistical Association and received the 1974 Spiegelman Award from the American Public Health Association. His major research in biostatistics has been the development of methods for analyzing categorical data, which he has applied to studies in health sciences, public health, highway safety, and criminal justice. He serves as a member of the National Academy of Science's Panel on Research on Deterrence and Incapacitation Effects, and its Committee on Research on Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice.

ADELIN GORDON LEVINE is an Associate Professor of Sociology at the State University of New York at Buffalo. She earned her Ph.D. at Yale and is the author of many articles on sociohistorical topics and mental health, as well as studies on women. With Murray Levine she wrote A Social History of Helping Services: Clinic, Court, School and Community and introduced and annotated a book on the Gary schools. She is presently conducting research on older students in a university setting.

MICHAEL J. MITCHELL was formerly a Research Associate in Political Science at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and is currently a lecturer in the Department of Politics at Princeton University.

MARGARET E. MONDRICK graduated from the University of Rhode Island and is currently a graduate student in Sociology at Syracuse University.

CLAUDINE SCHWEBER-KOREN is currently emphasizing research and teaching in criminal justice. She is completing her doctorate from the State University of New York at Buffalo, writing about education in prisons, particularly of women inmates, with the Federal Bureau of Prisons. She also teaches part time in the Sociology Department at George Washington University.