

Editor's overview

At the end of one year of editing Applied Psycholinguistics, we are more aware than ever of the extent to which the process of academic publication relies on the generously donated time and thoughtfulness of our colleagues. We wish to thank the members of our Editorial Board for their labors throughout the year, and to announce the appointment of four new members to the Editorial Board: Philip Prinz of Pennsylvania State University, Ronnie Wilbur of Purdue, Charles Read of the University of Wisconsin – Madison, and Mary Elizabeth Curtis of Harvard University. In addition, we have had the occasion to call upon many guest reviewers, who have helped us in their own particular areas of expertise. Their names are listed below, as a small token of our gratitude to them.

Several of the articles published during 1984 were, in fact, processed under the editorial supervision of Sheldon Rosenberg, the founding editor of Applied Psycholinguistics. Once again, we express our appreciation to Shel for establishing Applied Psycholinguistics and for having continued to carry his editorial tasks this last year in such a way as to give us a more gradual introduction to the demands of editorship.

Finally, we express our deep gratitude to Sandra Sumner and Patton Tabors, who have coordinated the editorial tasks at Massachusetts General Hospital and at Harvard, respectively. They have assumed the primary responsibility of editorship—that of worrying about whether things are getting done on time, in addition to organizing proofreading and to overseeing communications with authors, reviewers, and publishers. Our appreciation of their contribution is inadequately reflected in this expression of thanks.
