
About the Authors

Pamela Brandwein is Associate Professor of Sociology and Government & Politics at the University of Texas at Dallas. She is working to develop a sociology of constitutional law that combines the sociology of knowledge and the history of constitutional interpretation. She is author of Reconstructing Reconstruction: The Supreme Court and the Production of Historical Truth (Duke University Press, 1999).

Keith J. Bybee is Associate Professor in the Department of Government at Harvard University. He is author of Mistaken Identity: The Supreme Court and the Politics of Minority Representation (Princeton, 1998). His current research examines the competing political conceptions at work in ambiguous judicial decisionmaking.

Richard E. Chard is Assistant Professor of Political Science and Public Administration and Urban Studies at Georgia State University. He has a Doctorate in Political Science from the State University of New York at Stony Brook and a Masters of Public Administration from the University of Arizona. He can be reached at polrec@panther.gsu.edu.

Jeffrey Davis is a Ph.D. candidate at Georgia State University and is currently completing his dissertation on state judicial independence. He served as Assistant Attorney General for the State of Georgia, counsel to the Atlanta Board of Education, and Legal Aide to the Speaker of the Georgia House of Representatives.

Charles R. Epp is Associate Professor in the Department of Public Administration at the University of Kansas. He has done comparative research on the role of legal mobilization in the rights revolution, the effects of lawyer populations on the economy, and other topics. He published The Rights Revolution: Lawyers, Activists, and Supreme Courts in Comparative Perspective (University of Chicago Press, 1998), which was awarded the Edward S. Corwin and C. Herman Pritchett awards of the American Political Science Association. His current research is on administrative legalization and the construction of legal rights at the local level.

Robert M. Howard is Assistant Professor of Political Science at Georgia State University in Atlanta. Professor Howard holds a law degree as well as a Ph.D. His research interests include the influence of courts on public policy and courts and public opinion. He has published articles on administrative and regulatory justice, lawyer regulation, and Presidents and the Supreme Court.

Nasser Hussain is visiting Henry Luce Professor in the Department of Law, Jurisprudence, and Social Thought and the Department of History at Amherst College. His book, A Jurisprudence of Emergency: Colonialism and the Rule of Law is forthcoming from the University of Michigan Press.

Joel T. Kaji is editorial and market researcher for Sports Illustrated. Dr. Kaji holds a Ph.D. in Political Science from the University of Michigan with a specialty in American Politics and formal theory. He taught courses in formal theory and American Politics at SUNY Stony Brook from 1993–1997.

Robert L. Nelson is Professor of Sociology, Chair of the Department of Sociology, and Director on the Law and Social Science Program at Northwestern University. He is also a Senior Research Fellow at the American Bar Foundation. His main interests are the relationship between law and social inequality and the social organization of law practice. His most recent book is Legalizing Gender Inequality: Courts, Markets, and Unequal Pay for Women in America (with William Bridges, Cambridge University Press, 1999).

Laura Beth Nielsen is a Research Fellow at the American Bar Foundation. She is a graduate of the University of California Berkeley's Jurisprudence and Social Policy Program and Boalt Hall School of Law. Her primary research interest is legal consciousness, and her dissertation, "License to Harass: Offensive Public Speech, Legal Consciousness, and Hierarchies of Race, Gender, and Class" studies the phenomenon of hate speech, targets' reactions and responses to it, as well as their attitudes about whether the law is the appropriate mechanism for dealing with such speech. Her research interests include feminist jurisprudence, law and inequality, and the legal profession.

Francesca Polletta is Assistant Professor of Sociology at Columbia University and currently Evelyn Green Davis Fellow at the Radcliffe Institute for Advanced Study. She has published widely on the cultural dimensions of collective action and is completing a book entitled Freedom Is an Endless Meeting: Experiments in Radical Democracy from Pre-War Pacifism to the Present. She is co-editor, with Jeff Goodwin and James Jasper, of Passionate Politics, a collection of essays on emotions and social movements.

Melissa Ptacek is a graduate student in the Department of History at the University of California at Berkeley, specializing in Late Modern European Intellectual History. She is preparing to file her dissertation on the topic of violence and the sacred in twentieth-century French thought. Her research interests focus on the relationships between religion and politics.

Francine Sanders Romero is Assistant Professor in the Division of Social and Policy Sciences at the University of Texas at San Antonio.

She has studied the implication of institutional setting and public opinion on the formulation and implementation of civil rights policies, with previous efforts examining federal district courts and the U.S. Congress. She has also conducted research on institutional policymaking in other realms, with a current focus on land use.