Educating Teachers and Nobles

Jo Burr Margadant

A collective biography of France's first generation of female secondary schoolteachers, this book examines the conflict between their public and private lives as well as their new professional standing.

Jo Burr Margadant describes the women who attended the normal school at Sèvres during the 1880s, their roles as teachers and subordinates in the public school system, their plight as outsiders in the social community, and their progress toward educational reforms. These women emerge as pioneers struggling to forge careers in an elite profession, controlled by men, and viewed as separate from and inferior to its male equivalent.

Becoming a French Aristocrat The Education of the Court Nobility, 1580–1715

Mark Motley

Focusing on the highest-ranking segment of the nobility, Mark Motley examines why a social group whose very essence was based on hereditary status would need or seek instruction and training for its young. Education, Motley argues, played both the conservative role of promoting assertions of "natural" superiority appropriate to a hereditary aristocracy, and the more dynamic role of fostering cultural changes that helped it maintain its power in a changing world.

Learning Together

A History of Coeducation in American Public Schools

David Tyack and Elisabeth Hansot

In the first comprehensive history of gender policies and practices in American public schools, David Tyack and Elisabeth Hansot explore the factors that have shaped coeducation since its origins. Their lively text is accompanied by photographs and photo-essays that add vivid evidence about gender in classrooms.

"A highly significant and much needed contribution to educational history, the history of women, and social history in general. The book is lucidly written, deeply researched, and convincingly documented. The interpretations are not only balanced but often imaginative and creative."—Carl Degler

"A very exciting book that should have a major impact on our thinking about the history of education in the United States."—Kathryn Kish Sklar
