The Journal of African History publishes articles and reviews ranging widely over the African past from the Late Stone Age to the present. Since its establishment in 1960, it has aimed to reflect all the major interests of historians of Africa, and has included contributions from specialists in a variety of disciplines, including archaeology, botany and comparative philology. Recent issues have devoted increasing space to economic history and to the colonial period. The journal seeks to present the results of new research in the broader context of historical change whether on a regional or continental scale. Contributions are welcomed in English or French. The contents include research articles, review articles and book reviews.

Volume 24, Number 2, June 1983

This is a Special Issue on the history of the family in Africa. It contains articles selected by two guest editors, Dr. Shula Marks and Dr. Richard Rathbone.

The articles are selected from papers originally presented to a conference held at the School of Oriental and African Studies under the joint auspices of the School and the British Social Science Research Council, in September 1981. The conference grew out of the editors' concern that the history of the family, which had become so lively and important an area of study in Europe and America since the 1960s, was being almost totally neglected in Africa.

The editors hope to stimulate research on a range of questions which could be fruitfully explored in the African context, and which could possibly feed into the wider historiography on the family in Britain, America and Europe.

New Perspectives and Conceptions of International Law

An Afro-European Dialogue

Edited by Konrad Ginther and Wolfgang Benedek
Institute of International Law and International Relations,
University of Graz, Austria

With contributions from Ethiopia, Kenia, Nigeria, Swasiland,
Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe, Austria, and the Federal Republic of Germany

The quest for new perspectives and conceptions of international law discussed in this book is a response to the transition in international relations from a Euro-centric, status quo-oriented state system to a geocentric, development-oriented one.

The contributions, focusing on New International Economic Order, Human Rights, and National Liberation in Southern Africa, are based on a workshop, which was jointly organized by African and European international law teachers at the University of Zimbabwe in 1982. On this occasion, new perspectives and conceptions of international law were elaborated in a new co-operative approach and on the basis mainly of African material on international law which has largely been neglected until now.

This publication is the product of what can be understood as a new mode of growth of international law as an academic discipline, through which the relevance of international law to the most urgent problems of our time ought to be enhanced.

THE JOURNAL OF MODERN AFRICAN STUDIES

The Journal offers a quarterly survey of politics, economics, and related topics in contemporary Africa.

The main emphasis is upon the peoples and policies, the problems and progress of this dynamic and disparate continent; upon the many societies that are evolving rather than the essential characteristics of the old; upon the present, not on the more distant past. The best current work is sought from specialists in different academic disciplines, whose contributions can illuminate and cross-fertilise one another.

The Journal seeks to promote a deeper understanding of what is happening in Africa today. It is intended for both the political scientist and the practical politician, the administrator and the advocate, the economist and the educator, the banker and the business man, the diplomat and the technocrat, the civil servant and the nationalist leader. All have something to contribute to these pages and, it is hoped, much to learn from them.

Editorial policy avoids commitment to any political viewpoint or ideology, whether imperialism, pan-Africanism, capitalism, socialism, or nationalism. Such concepts, however, have relevance to the modern African situation, and merit serious discussion, often from several different points of view, in order that controversial issues may be fairly examined.
