

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

LYLE D. CALVIN is Professor of Statistics, Chairman of the Department of Statistics, and Director of the Survey Research Center at Oregon State University. His professional and research interests are in the area of design and analysis of sample surveys. He received his B.S. from the University of Chicago and his Ph.D. from North Carolina State.

HOWARD S. ERLANGER, Associate Professor of Sociology at the University of Wisconsin, Madison, has been engaged in a series of studies of public interest lawyers, and of the legal profession generally, with colleagues at the Institute for Research on Poverty (Madison) and the American Bar Foundation.

DOUGLAS A. KLEGON is a sociologist specializing in the areas of law and occupations, who has recently published papers on the history of the legal profession and on women in the professions. He is currently pursuing post-doctoral studies at the University of Michigan.

RICHARD LEMPERT is Professor of Law at the University of Michigan Law School. He is coauthor (with Stephen Saltzburg) of A Modern Approach to Evidence and has published articles on a variety of topics in the sociology of law.

DANIEL S. LEV is Professor of Political Science at the University of Washington in Seattle. He has written widely on Indonesian politics and legal change.

ROBERT MASON is Professor of Sociology at Oregon State University and a director of research projects at the Survey Research Center there. He received his B.S. from Oregon State and his Ph.D. from Stanford.

JACK SPENCE, Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of Massachusetts-Boston, received his J.D. degree from Harvard University and his Ph.D. from Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He is currently at work on a book comparing court decentralization innovations in Chile, the United States, and Cuba, and is studying the role of ideology and political consciousness in grass-roots political participation.