Recent modules

Catatonia: a guide for clinicians

Catatonia was historically thought of as a subtype of schizophrenia, and has only relatively recently been understood as a diagnostic entity in itself. It is still poorly recognised by most clinicians and, if left untreated, catatonia can lead to serious medical complications and even death. This module covers the assessment and management procedures for catatonia and will be of interest to psychiatrists working in any clinical setting. CPD credits: 1

Core competencies for external review (FREE)

This module will be of relevance to anyone who is taking on, or considering, the role of a reviewer on visits to other services. The reviewer role can be highly stimulating and rewarding; however, it is also very demanding and requires considerable preparation, application and teamwork. This module will take you through some of the tasks and competencies needed to carry out the role successfully. CPD credits: 1

Diagnosing bipolar depression

Mania is the hallmark of bipolar disorder, yet depression is the predominant clinical state and the one most responsible for the high morbidity and mortality associated with this condition. The diagnosis of bipolar depression can become challenging, and differentiating bipolar from unipolar depression is essential in order to make the correct choice of drug treatment. In this module you will learn how to carry out an informed examination and reach the correct diagnosis for patients presenting in a depressed state. CPD credits: 1
