The Theology of Religious Vocation

By EDWARD FARRELL, O.P. 26/-

As the author states, the primary aim of this work is to evolve, from more or less general theological doctrine about religious vocation, certain practical principles which can be used profitably by confessors and spiritual advisers in their task of guiding prospective candidates for the religious life.

"With his thorough knowledge of scholastic philosophy, the author presents here as complete a guide as seems possible for judging religious vocations. This problem, analysis-defying at best, is a great one calling for the treatment of a specialist such as Fr Farrell and demanding the spiritual acumen of one who is as practical as he. This book should be a valuable aid to directors, and an immense help to the young themselves."
—Ave Maria.

Testing the Spirit

By F. D. DUFFEY, C.S.C. 18/6

"No one will question the good sense of the score of directives suggested by Fr Duffey, which combine sound principles of mental hygiene with indispensable rules for the discernment of spirits."—Buckfast Abbey Chronicle.

"Out of his rich experience as a master of novices, addressing himself to other vocational counsellors, the author gives many practical directives to those whose difficult task it is to bring to maturity the spiritual powers and to uproot the spiritual faults of aspirants to the Religious life."
—Homiletic and Pastoral Review.

Psychiatry and Asceticism

By F. D. DUFFEY, C.S.C. 15/-

Father Duffey points out defects in the exercise of the science of psychiatry as it is practised today, and from a consideration of some of the defects of the science, he goes on to a treatment of certain ascetical principles and practices which are basic to a complete understanding of difficulties in man's mental life. All those concerned with the direction of souls will profit by the experience of the author.

"This book is well worth reading. The style is good. Its documentation is adequate. Its contents are sound. Moreover, it is inspiring."
—Catholic Educational Review.
