FISH REMAINS IN ARCHAEOLOGY

and Paleo-Environmental Studies

By RICHARD W. CASTEEL

This book has been written to provide both a comprehensive introduction to the concepts and potentials involved with the study of fish remains, and the most complete reference source of bibliographical data yet to appear on the subject. In particular the use of Russian sources on the subject is unique. A discussion of the general osteology of fishes is followed by individual reviews of a number of key skeletal elements and fish scales, enabling the investigator to identify the animals involved, assess their season of death, estimate their weight, etc. There are numerous examples showing the value of studies such as these to archaeologists, paleontologists, paleo-climatologists, zoogeographers and fisheries workers throughout the world.

THE EARLY MESOAMERICAN VILLAGE

Edited by KENT V. FLANNERY

With contributions by: Elizabeth Brumfiel, Robert D. Drennan, Timothy K. Earle, Joyce Marcus, Jane W. Pires-Ferreira, Stephen Plog, Nanette M. Pyne, Robert G. D. Reynolds, David L. Rossman, Michael E. Whalen, Marcus C. Winter, Alan Zarky

A Volume in the STUDIES IN ARCHAEOLOGY Series

From the Reviews:

"This book is unique in the literature of New World archeology, and I suspect that its publication will mark a real increase in intellectual acuity, properly conceived research programs, and effectively executed excavation. . . ."—Science, March 25, 1977

Starting from the activity area, and moving through the house, barrio, village, and region to the interregional level, this book questions and probes archaeological methods, presuppositions, and attitudes, and at the same time lays the basis for a comprehensive understanding of Mesoamerican society.

It finds that all too often what archeologists actually do in the field bears little relation to what they want to do, or claim that they are doing. From this standpoint, it critically evaluates techniques for excavation, sampling of sites and regions, and stylistic analysis, as well as theoretical factors of explanation such as population pressure, trade, and religion.
