

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

DAVID M. ENGEL is Associate Professor of Law and Adjunct Professor of Anthropology at the State University of New York at Buffalo. He has published several articles based on his Illinois court and community research and has written about similar research in an Asian setting in his book, Code and Custom in a Thai Provincial Court (University of Arizona Press).

EDWARD GOETZ is a doctoral candidate in the Political Science Department at Northwestern University. He is currently working on his dissertation on the politics of urban redevelopment.

ANDREW C. GORDON is Professor of Sociology and Psychology and on the Research Faculty at the Center for Urban Affairs and Policy Research at Northwestern University.

EUGENE GRIFFIN is currently a graduate student in the joint program in Law and Psychology at Northwestern University.

MICHAEL E. HILTON is Associate Scientist at the Alcohol Research Group, Institute of Epidemiology and Behavioral Medicine, Medical Research Institute of San Francisco. He is currently working on a study of local planning and zoning regulations as these affect alcohol outlets and on a study of trends in abstention among the general U.S. population.

DAN A. LEWIS is Assistant Professor of Education and on the Research Faculty at the Center for Urban Affairs and Policy Research at Northwestern University.

MARK SCHOENFIELD is in private practice with the firm of Jerome Torshen Limited.

PERRY SHAPIRO is Professor of Economics at the University of California, Santa Barbara. His research has recently been focused on the use of discrete choice analysis to analyze individual preferences for non-market choices. A recent study "Micro-Based Estimates of Demand Functions for Local School Expenditures" appears in Econometrica (Sept. 1982).

NEIL VIDMAR is Professor of Psychology at the University of Western Ontario, London, Canada, and also holds a cross-appointment with the School of Law. He has published articles relating to procedural justice, jury behavior, and the social psychological dynamics of legal punishment. Current research projects include a study (with Joe Samuels) of the Ontario

Business Practices Act and (with Valerie Hans) a book on the jury.

HAROLD L. VOTEY, JR. is Professor of Economics at the University of California, Santa Barbara. He has published a number of articles on the economics of crime and justice. His recent research concerns the control of drunken driving in England, Scandinavia, and the United States. He is the author (jointly with Llad Phillips) of The Economics of Crime Control (Sage).