In the Magic Land of Peyote

By Fernando Benítez

Translated by John Upton

Introduction by Peter T. Furst

Fernando Benítez, author of the monumental Los indios de México, is the first non-Indian ever to have accompanied the Huicholes on their annual peyote-gathering pilgrimage. His fascinating and perceptive account of the experience depicts what may be the best-preserved body of archaic myth and ritual in Middle America.

A Mexican Family Empire

The Latifundio of the Sánchez Navarros, 1765—1867

By Charles H. Harris III

Perhaps no other institution has had a more significant impact on Latin American history than the large landed estate—the hacienda. In Mexico, the latifundio, an estate usually composed of two or more haciendas, dominated the social and economic structure of the country for four hundred years. Here is a careful examination of the largest latifundio ever to have existed—that of the Sánchez Navarro family in northern Coahuila.

Personality Development in Two Cultures

A Cross-Cultural Longitudinal Study of School Children in Mexico and the United States

By Wayne H. Holtzman

Rogelio Díaz-Guerrero

and Jon D. Swartz

This book is the outgrowth of an extensive investigation into the different patterns of personality, cognitive, and perceptual development of school children in Mexico and the United States. It presents and analyzes the results of the study, in which over eight hundred children in Mexico City and Austin, Texas, were tested over a six-year period.

Energy and Structure

A Theory of Social Power

By Richard Newbold Adams

"In the short space available here it is impossible to do justice to the seriousness of Richard Adams' Energy and Structure. . . . the essay could also be billed as a general theory of sociocultural evolution and social organization—such is the depth and breadth of its concern. . . . it integrates serious thinking about energy and social change, reaching some disquieting conclusions to which attention must be paid."—

Introduction to Classical Nahuatl

By J. Richard Andrews

Classical Nahuatl was the language used by the Aztecs at the time of Cortés's conquest of Mexico and until near the end of the colonial period.

Introduction to Classical Nahuatl is the first concerted, detailed application of modern linguistic analysis to Nahuatl and the most helpful guide available to the language's unusual features.

LATIN AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICIES

An Analysis

Harold Eugene Davis, Larman C. Wilson, and others

Historians, political scientists, and economists here examine Latin American foreign policy from the perspective of the individual nations. Focusing on the formulation of foreign policy, the contributors analyze the major international problems the countries confront and the position they assume in their relations with various other countries, regions, and international organizations.

THE CHANGING FACE OF NORTHEAST BRAZIL

KEMPTON E. WEBB

Northeast Brazil stands as an area of untold potential for economic and political development and for social and political unrest. Dr. Webb explains how Brazil is changing and what must be done to insure its orderly development and the well-being of its people. In addition, The Changing Face of Northeast Brazil provides a new approach to geography that can produce results of crucial interest when applied to developing areas the world over.

The Politics of Oil in Venezuela

Franklin Tugwell. A case study of the relationship between foreign oil corporations and the state in Venezuela, this book focuses on the strategies adopted by Venezuelan leaders to control the behavior of the world's largest and most powerful multinational corporations. Among the main themes of the book are the pattern of bargaining and conflict between the government and the oil companies; the impact of ideology upon the selection of alternative courses of action; and the interdependence of the domestic political process, petroleum policy, and rapid social change. SPURS Special Program for Urban and Regional Studies of Developing Areas

Description of the Program

SPURS provides an opportunity for a small number of especially qualified persons to spend a year at MIT studying the problems of urban and regional change within a broad context of national development. It is a program of study, deliberately flexible, and not leading to a degree.

Content of the Program

The Program will include course work at the graduate level, lectures, informal seminars, and research. Participants are encouraged to tailor their work to individual interests and requirements.

Special Opportunities

SPURS offers participants the opportunity to work with people from other countries interested in similar problems and to meet leading scholars, policy makers, and advanced graduate students in the field of urban and regional planning.

Applications

The academic year runs from mid-September to the end of May. Application forms may be obtained from:
Director, SPURS
