Documents of American Indian Diplomacy

Treaties, Agreements, and Conventions, 1775-1979

By Vine Deloria, Jr. and Raymond J. DeMallie

Foreword by Daniel K. Inouye

Reproduced in this two-volume set are hundreds of treaties and agreements made by Indian nations—with the Continental Congress; England, Spain, and other foreign countries; the ephemeral Republic of Texas and the Confederate States; railroad companies seeking rights-of-way across Indian land; and other Indian nations.

Many were made with the United States but either remained unratified by Congress or were rejected by the Indians themselves after the Senate amended them unacceptably. Many others are “agreements” made after the official end of the U.S. treaty making in 1871. Documents of American Indian Diplomacy is the first major, accessible compilation of such documents since Charles Kappler’s 1904 Indian Affairs, Laws and Treaties, which included most (but not all) ratified treaties and which, until now, has been the bible of people working in the field of federal Indian law. As a group, these documents provide the full historical context surrounding the ratified treaties and agreements, and they highlight American Indians’ roles as active agents in international diplomatic affairs.

THE COMMON LAW MIND

Medieval and Early Modern Conceptions

J. W. TUBBS

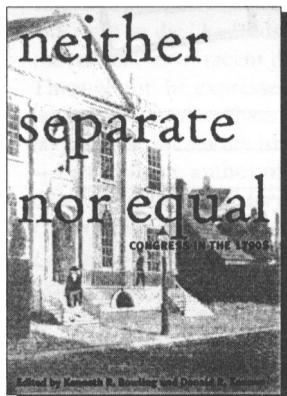

“Traditionally, historians have stressed two points about English law. Firstly, they have argued that the English from the 1100s onwards saw their law as essentially customary in nature. Secondly, they have asserted the independence of English law from continental systems, and particularly from civil or Roman law. Tubbs argues strongly against both these claims. He provides convincing evidence against the notion that medieval lawyers thought of the law primarily as custom and demonstrates that they derived much—including many ideas about custom itself—from Roman law. Drawing on contemporary treatises and on an impressive range of the year books, Tubbs also argues effectively that it is wrong to say—as some scholars have—that law was not made but declared in the Middle Ages, or that legislation was unimportant. This is a well-organized and well-written book.”—Johann Sommerville, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Neither Separate nor Equal Congress in the 1790s

Edited by Kenneth R. Bowling and Donald R. Kennon

Scholars today take for granted the existence of a “wall of separation” dividing the three branches of the federal government. Neither Separate nor Equal: Congress in the 1790s demonstrates that such lines of separation among the legislative, executive, and judicial branches, however, were neither so clearly delineated nor observed in the first decade of the federal government’s history.

Lethal Judgments

Assisted Suicide and American Law

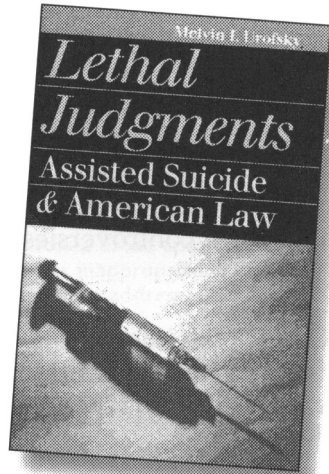

Melvin I. Urofsky

"Among the many bioethical quandaries of our time, physician-assisted suicide is perhaps the most disquieting. In response, Urofsky's succinct yet remarkably wide-ranging introduction clarifies this controversial topic. After sketching the history of 'the right to die,' he leads us deftly through the intricacies of recent court decisions. Throughout, he expresses sophisticated legal and ethical analysis in terms that laypersons can readily understand."

THE ATLANTA YOUTH MURDERS AND THE POLITICS OF RACE

Bernard Headley

"In a careful and poignant narrative analysis, [Headley] asks what conjunction of social forces produced twenty-nine murders of impoverished black children during the administration of a black mayor in the South's most progressive and corporately successful city. He links Atlanta's rise to the unraveling of the core city and the ghettoization of violent crime."

Outstanding Scholarship

Behavioral Law and Economics

Cass R. Sunstein, Editor

This exciting volume marks the birth of a new field—a field that studies law with reference to an accurate, rather than a crude, understanding of human behavior. Behavioral Law and Economics presents new findings in cognitive psychology and behavioral economics, which show that people are frequently both unselfish and over-optimistic; that people have limited willpower and limited self-control; and that people are “boundedly” rational, in the sense that they have limited information-processing powers, and frequently rely on mental short-cuts and rules of thumb. Understanding this kind of human behavior has large-scale implications for the analysis of law, in areas including environmental protection, taxation and tax compliance, constitutional law, voting behavior, punitive damages for civil rights violations, labor negotiations and strikes, and corporate finance.

Governing Morals

A Social History of Moral Regulation

Alan Hunt

This broad-ranging history of moral regulation in Britain and the United States from the late seventeenth century onward, covers specific movements such as the Society for the Reformation of Manners, the Vice Society, sexual abuse and anti-pornography movements, and self-help movements. Hunt argues that they provide classic instances of the intimate link between the “governance of others” and the “governance of the self.”

The Origins of the European Legal Order

Maurizio Lupoi

Translated by Adrian Belton

This is the first translation into English of "Alle Radici del Mondo Giuridico Europeo" published in Italy in 1994, and named "The Law Book of the Year" in 1995. The book is a comprehensive reappraisal of thinking on the common structural features of the various European jurisdictions. Professor Lupoi argues the case for the existence of an earlier system of common law as far back as between the sixth and eleventh centuries. Based on various Germanic customs, this law was codified in Latin and survives in modified form in modern English common law.

A History of the County Court, 1846–1971

Patrick Polden

This is the first full-length account of the establishment of the County Court in England and Wales in 1846 and its work, through to its reconstruction in 1971. It traces its development from being largely a debt collection agency to its far wider jurisdiction today as the main forum for civil disputes. The author describes its organization and officers and discusses the roles of lawyers and lay persons. Given the current controversy over access to justice, this is a timely new history.

The Framing of the 1842

Catherine Seville

Talfourd's Copyright Bill was first presented in 1837, and the public and Parliamentary controversy it provoked is reflected in contemporary pamphlets, correspondence, and hundreds of petitions presented to Parliament, as well as in the changing aims of the Bill. This book explores and sets in context the making of the Copyright Act of 1842, using it to illuminate enduring issues and difficulties in the legal concept of intellectual property.

The Colonies of Law

Colonialism, Zionism and Law in Early Mandate Palestine

Ronen Shamir

This book traces attempts of Jewish jurists-nationalists to establish a non-religious system of Hebrew Courts in British-ruled Palestine. The book analyzes the secular, national and anticolonial ideology of the Hebrew Law of Peace and shows that Jewish religious groups, secular lawyers and leading Zionist institutions undermined the Hebrew Law project. The book explores the reluctance of leading Zionists to allow communities, rather than organized quasi-state institutions, to define the trajectory of Jewish nationalism.
