

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

JOHN M. CONLEY is Associate Professor of Law at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. He holds both J.D. and Ph.D. (Anthropology) from Duke University. In addition to his research on language in legal contexts, he has published several papers on primatology and on intellectual property and is the coauthor of Statistical Evidence in Litigation (forthcoming).

BEN M. CROUCH is Associate Professor of Sociology at Texas A&M University. His longstanding area of research concerns the effects of prison control structures and social control. He is currently conducting research on how prison change affects the informal system of inmate dispute settlement.

MARC GALANTER is Evjue-Bascom Professor of Law and South Asian Studies at the University of Wisconsin—Madison, where he is director of the Disputes Processing Research Program. He was the editor of the Law & Society Review from 1973 to 1976 and president of the Law and Society Association from 1983 to 1985. He is the author of Competing Equalities: Law and the Backward Classes in India (1984) and is presently working on a book on the role of litigation in contemporary American society.

JAMES W. MARQUART is Assistant Professor of Sociology at Mississippi State University. His current research focuses on guards' use of physical coercion as a means of social control and the difficulties of doing participant observation in the prison setting.

ELIZABETH MERTZ is a Fellow at the Center for Psychosocial Studies. She received her Ph.D. in Sociocultural Anthropology from Duke University in 1982. Her research interests include sociolinguistics, semiotics, and the role of language in social institutions such as law.

WILLIAM M. O'BARR is Professor of Anthropology at Duke University. His primary research interests focus on language in institutional contexts, especially courts of law and advertising. In addition to his work in the United States on these topics, he has conducted ethnographic research among the Pare people of Tanzania and studied bilingual courts in Canada. His books include Language and Politics (1976), Linguistic Evidence: Language, Power and Strategy in the Courtroom (1982), and Language and Power (1984).

GLENN L. PIERCE is Associate Director of the Center for Applied Social Research at Northwestern University. His research interests include a broad range of subjects in the areas of criminal justice and mental health policy.

MICHAEL L. RADELET is Associate Professor of Sociology at the University of Florida. His areas of specialization are forensic psychiatry and medical ethics.

BERNARD WEISSBOURD is Chairman of the Board of the Center for Psychosocial Studies and Chairman of Metropolitan Structures. He is also a member of the Illinois Bar. He received his J.D. at the University of Chicago in 1948. His current work focuses on law, language, and economics.