

£6,000 NOW? WHAT'S THE CATCH?

You are.

We reckon that anyone about to embark on a post graduate course in Business Management or Certified Accountancy will be quite a catch when they've qualified.

Which is why we're prepared to lend you up to £6,000 for the period you're studying, without asking for a penny back during that time.

And if you're giving up full time employment to further your studies, it could be a lot more. As much as one and a third times your salary, to be precise.

Once you start work and begin to pay it back, we'll still be generous: for the first two years you need only give us the interest. (Which is kept at a specially fixed low rate in the first year.)

The only thing we ask is that you be 18 or over. And you open an account with us.

For more details of Midland Professional Studies Loan, pick up a leaflet from your nearest branch or write to Midland Bank plc, Customer Information Service, PO Box 2, Sheffield S13CC.

That way, we can be sure you won't slip through the net.

Cooke & Oughton: The Common Law of Obligations

1989. By P J Cooke, LLB, MPhil and D W Oughton, LLB, MPhil, both Senior Lecturers in Law at Liverpool Polytechnic

The distinction between tort law and contract law is sometimes difficult to ascertain, and academics are increasingly of the opinion that the overall subject is better understood if the topics are studied together. The Common Law of Obligations is the first book to cover the subject in depth, and will therefore prove a most invaluable course book. The complimentary nature of the various strands of the common law of obligations is illustrated in detail, and the general principles governing the creation of obligations, the remedies available in the event of breach of an obligation, and the factors giving rise to the negation of liability, are all explained in detail; these principles are then illustrated through selected areas of common law where difficulties are caused by the contract/tort/restitution divide.

Keane: Modern Law of Evidence

2nd edition

1989. By Adrian Keane, LLB, of the Inner Temple, Barrister, Senior Lecturer, Inns of Court School of Law, Sometime Lecturer of the School of Law, Hong Kong University

“ . . . the best basic student text available on the market for degree students as well as students taking the bar and Law Society Examinations.”

Law Quarterly Review

Examining the theory of the law of evidence, as well as its practical application, the first edition of this work proved immensely popular both with students and law practitioners. Attention is focussed on recent legal decisions, rather than moribund aspects of the law, with special emphasis being placed on the accumulating body of cases which have grown since the Criminal Evidence Act 1984, and the important provisions of the Police and Criminal Justice Act 1988. As in the previous edition, care has been taken to ensure that the account of this complex subject remains clear and concise.

An Introduction to Contemporary International Law

A Policy-Oriented Perspective

LUNG-CHU CHEN

In this introduction to all major aspects of contemporary international law, Lung-chu Chen applies the New Haven school's policy-oriented perspective. Unlike conventional works in international law, this book is organized and structured in terms of the process of decision in the international arena and illustrated with numerous historical examples and events.

Judicial Discretion

AHARON BARAK

Arguing that it is a judge's judicial philosophy — the product of his experience and worldview — that determines his choice in difficult cases, Justice Barak contends that judges use discretion wisely when they take into account the strengths and weaknesses of the court as an institution, the interrelations among the main branches of government in a democracy, and the effect of their actions on public confidence in the judiciary. 312 pp. £22.50
