
About the Authors

Laura E. Gómez is Professor of Law at the University of California, Los Angeles. She received her law degree (1992) and doctorate in sociology (1994) from Stanford University. She writes about the politics of crime and criminal law as they intersect with racial and gender identity and inequality. In 1997 Temple University Press published her book Misconceiving Mothers: Legislators, Prosecutors, and the Politics of Prenatal Drug Exposure. The article published here is part of an ongoing study of criminal justice in territorial New Mexico.

Laura Beth Nielsen is a Research Fellow at the American Bar Foundation. She is a graduate of the University of California Berkeley's Jurisprudence and Social Policy Program and Boalt Hall School of Law. Her primary research interest is legal consciousness, and her dissertation, "License to Harass: Offensive Public Speech, Legal Consciousness, and Hierarchies of Race, Gender, and Class" studies the phenomenon of hate speech, targets' reactions and responses to it, as well as their attitudes about whether the law is the appropriate mechanism for dealing with such speech. Her research interests include feminist jurisprudence, law and inequality, and the legal profession.

Karen Orren is Professor in the Department of Political Science at the University of California at Los Angeles. Her most recent book is Belated Feudalism: Labor, the Law, and the Development of American Liberalism. Prior to that she published Corporate Power and Social Change: The Politics of the Life Insurance Industry. She is co-founder and editor of Studies in American Political Development, published by Cambridge University Press.

Tanina Rostain is Associate Professor at New York Law School, where she teaches courses in the legal profession and evidence. Her areas of research include legal practice and law and social sciences. She is currently involved in a research project on lawyers in corporate tax practice and transnational corporate practice.

Abigail C. Saguy is Assistant Professor in the Department of Sociology at the University of California, Los Angeles. She is on leave as a post-doctoral scholar in the Robert Wood Johnson Scholars in Health Policy Research Program at Yale University from fall 2000 until 2002. Professor Saguy is currently making revisions to her book, Is This Sexual Harassment: A Comparison of the United States and France (forthcoming, University of California Press), which examines how sexual harassment has been defined in the United States and France, in the law, and by mass media, lawyers, activists, and human resource managers.

Ann Southworth is Professor of Law at Case Western Reserve University. She has written about the work, roles, and norms of civil rights and poverty lawyers. Her current research is on lawyers who serve conservative causes.

Christopher Tomlins is Senior Research Fellow at the American Bar Foundation in Chicago. His books include The State and the Unions: Labor Relations, Law, and the Organized Labor Movement in America, 1880-1960 and Law, Labor, and Ideology in the Early American Republic. He is also editor of the Law and History Review, the monograph series Cambridge Historical Studies in American Law and Society, and (with Michael Grossberg) the Cambridge History of Law in America. His current research focuses on questions of legal culture, colonization, migration, and work in the 17th and 18th century.

Marco Verweij is a Research Fellow at the Max Planck Project Group on the Law of Common Goods in Bonn, Germany. He is co-editor of Culture in World Politics, and author of Cultures and Institutions in Transboundary Relations. In his current research he focuses on how to democratize and diversify multilateral organizations, as well as on how governments can best promote the development and application of technologies that are less costly than current technologies and that emit no greenhouse gases.