Journal of the Society for American Music

Journal of the Society for American Music (JSAM) is an international, peer-reviewed journal that explores all aspects of American music and music in the Americas. JSAM is dedicated to supporting scholarship that transcends disciplinary boundaries, cutting across historical musicology, music theory, ethnomusicology, cultural theory, and American studies. JSAM encourages international dialogue across disciplines. The journal features articles, reviews of books, recordings, and multimedia items, and explorations of special topics.

Contributors

Richard Bramwell is a lecturer in communication and media studies at Loughborough University. He holds a Ph.D. from the London School of Economics and Political Science. His monograph, UK Hip-Hop, Grime and the City (2015), examines the aesthetic, cultural, and commercial practices of working-class youths in London's rap music scenes. His latest research project is focused on performance, rap culture, and English identity.

James M. Doering is a professor of music at Randolph-Macon College, where he teaches music history, music theory, and chairs the Department of Arts. His research interests include film music and the American symphony orchestra. His biography of music mogul Arthur Judson (University of Illinois Press, 2013) earned an AMS 75 PAYS Subvention and honors from the Association for Recorded Sound Collections. His work on silent film accompaniment has appeared in The Musical Quarterly and been featured at the National Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C.

Naomi Graber is an assistant professor at the University of Georgia. Her research concerns Kurt Weill's work in the United States, with a focus on issues of immigration and acculturation, and more broadly in film and theater of the 1930s. She is also interested in contemporary Broadway and Hollywood practices. Her work has appeared in Studies in Musical Theatre, and she is a frequent contributor to blogs such as Musicology Now and Trax on the Trail.

Nancy Yunhwa Rao is a professor of music at the Mason Gross School of the Arts, Rutgers University. A specialist in American music and contemporary Chinese compositions, she bridges gender and ethnic studies with musicology, music theory, and scholarship on Chinese opera. She has published on American ultramodern composers, intercultural musical analysis, contemporary Chinese music, and historical studies of Chinese American music. Her book Chinatown Opera Theater in North America is published by the University Illinois Press.

Christopher M. Reali is an assistant professor of music industry at Ramapo College of New Jersey. He holds a Ph.D. in musicology from University of North Carolina–Chapel Hill, and his research investigates the tapestry of music, race, place, and people. Chris has presented at numerous conferences, and his published work has appeared in Southern Cultures. He has also toured as a guitar technician and tour manager for Chris Whitley and as a guitar, bass, and drum tech for David Gray.

Marta Robertson (associate professor, Gettysburg College) studies the intersections between movement and music in diverse traditions, including Okinawan diasporic communities, World War II Japanese American incarceration camps, and the collaborative process of Aaron Copland and Martha Graham in Appalachian Spring. Her current book project, which examines music and dance encounters at politically charged junctures between Japan and the United States, is forthcoming from the University of Illinois Press.

Douglas W. Shadle is an assistant professor of musicology at Vanderbilt University's Blair School of Music. He is the author of Orchestrating the Nation: The Nineteenth-Century American Symphonic Enterprise (Oxford, 2016). He is also the winner of an ASCAP Deems Taylor/Virgil Thomson Award (2015) and the Society for American Music's Irving Lowens Article Award (2016).

Nicholas Stevens studies modernist and new art music, and teaches music history at Case Western Reserve University. His recently completed dissertation considers the aesthetics and ethics of contemporary operas that aim to depict archetypal fallen women, with emphasis on their gestures toward popular music, film and broadcast media, historical convention, and identity. He was a fellow at the Library of Congress in 2015 and an affiliate at the Baker-Nord Center for the Humanities in 2016.

Sarah Tyrrell is an associate teaching professor at the University of Missouri–Kansas City Conservatory of Music, where she teaches opera history, Latin American music, world music, and music research. Prof. Tyrrell earned the MM in musicology from the New England Conservatory and a Ph.D. from the University of Kansas. She has presented her research at conferences of the College Music Society, American Musicological Society, AMS Pedagogy Study Group, and National Association of Hispanic and Latin Studies, among others.

Serena Yang is a Ph.D. candidate in musicology at the University of California, Davis. She is currently writing her dissertation on John Cage's reception in postwar Japan. Her research interests include cross-cultural studies and experimental and contemporary music in the United States and Japan. Her article "Mode and Atonality in Japanese Music: Pitch Structure in Minoru Miki's Jo no kyoku" is published in Music Research Forum 30 (2015).
