Papal Revenues In the Middle Ages

By Wm. E. Lunt - - - 2 vols.

"These volumes . . . render available much that would otherwise be quite inaccessible and provide the student of church history with a badly needed dossier. . . ."—The Commonweal.

"A splendid summary analysis of the financial machinery and income of the Papacy and a large mass of illustrative documents which buttress . . . (the author's) . . . generalizations. . . ."—Harry Elmer Barnes.

"From this book a reader may gain two general impressions. One, of the efficiency and vigour of the Papal fiscal system. . . . The other, of the completeness of the hold that this system had upon the Western Church. . . ."—The London Times.

Papal Revenues in the Middle Ages is No. XIX of the Records of Civilization, published by Columbia University Press. Among other volumes in this series are Scott's Literature of the New Testaments; Bewer's Literature of the Old Testament, and Shotwell's See of Peter.

A complete description of each of these books can be found in Columbia Books 1893-1933, and its supplementary Seasonal Announcements. Columbia Books is the modern, illustrated dictionary-catalogue. In its 225 pages can be found not only information concerning the books mentioned above, but complete data concerning the many Press publications in related fields.

A coupon good for a one-dollar credit is contained in each copy of Columbia Books—which itself is $1.00. The one-dollar credit can be applied against the purchase of any Press book, whether from us or from your bookstore. And owners of Columbia Books automatically receive each Seasonal Announcement as it appears.
