APSA Helps Organize Congressional Briefing

To determine the reality of the perception that Americans have lost interest and trust in government, the Consortium of Social Science Associations (COSSA) sponsored a July 16, congressional briefing entitled "Do Americans Care About and Trust Their Government?" APSA, an active member of COSSA, helped organize the briefing.

John Hibbing of the University of Nebraska, Pippa Norris from Harvard University, and Wendy Rahn, a faculty member at the University of Minnesota, discussed their research on Americans' attitudes towards major governmental institutions, the role of the media, and the political disengagement of young people. Representative David Price (D-NC), a six-term member of Congress who holds a Ph.D. in political science from Yale University, moderated the session.

Enter Your Data Now for Centennial Biographical Directory

The Centennial Biographical Directory of Members is currently being compiled. All Association members, and only Association members, will be listed in this first update of the world's most comprehensive and useful listing of political scientists in over a decade.

Each member's listing in the new Directory will include complete contact information (including web site addresses, when available), a representative list of publications and professional awards, and an employment history.

To ensure accuracy, members should update their own records by visiting the Directory web site (<http://search.apsanet.org>). Nonmembers wishing to be included must first join the Association, and can do so by visiting the membership section of the APSA web site (www.apsanet.org/Membership/).

A testament to the reach and importance of political science, the Directory will also feature essays on the discipline's history and practice.

The Directory will be available in paper and on a fully searchable CD-ROM. APSA members may now order copies of both versions for 70% of their cover prices (www.apsanet.org/pubs/order.cfm).
