DORTHE VON BÜLOW received her doctorate from the University of Copenhagen. She has been a fellow of the Centre for Development Research, Copenhagen, since 1984, and published with them (in 1988 and in 1991) studies on Kipsigis women based on the fieldwork which she did there together with Anne Sørensen.

DEIDRE CRUMBLEY teaches in the Departments of Anthropology and Religion at the University of Florida at Gainesville. She was on the faculty of the University of Ibadan for four years, and now focuses her research on the various formations of Christianity in Africa and its New World diaspora.

JANE GUYER is Associate Professor of Anthropology at Boston University. This article is part of a larger study of agricultural change in western Nigeria, and continues her work on the sources of urban food supply – her previous books being Family and Farm in Southern Cameroon (1984) and Feeding African Cities (1987).

SHARON HUTCHINSON teaches Anthropology at the University of Wisconsin at Madison; however, currently (1992/3) she holds the Royal Anthropological Institute's fellowship at the University of Manchester. Her thesis, for the University of Chicago in 1988, was on 'The Nuer in Crisis: coping with money, war and the state'.

ANNE SØRENSEN received her doctorate from the University of Copenhagen in 1990. Since then she has worked as an adviser in the Ministry of Women in Development, Culture and Youth in Kampala. Previously she was affiliated for six years to the Centre for Development Research at Copenhagen, studying gender aspects of agricultural production in Kericho District, Kenya.
