

Activities

Patrick Coy, professor, department of political science and Center for Applied Conflict Management, Kent State University, has been named series coeditor for the research annual Research in Social Movements, Conflicts, and Change.

Joseph S. Nye Jr., dean of the John F. Kennedy School of Government, Harvard University, delivered the Eighteenth Morgenthau Memorial Lecture on Ethics and Foreign Policy for the Carnegie Council in April. His lecture was titled "Defining National Interests in an Information Age."

Alan Schechter, professor of political science, Wellesley College, has been elected chairman of the J. William Fulbright Scholarship Board. He has been a member of the Board since 1995.

Administrative Appointments

Larry S. Aspin, chair, department of political science, Bradley University.

Ian Shapiro, chair, department of political science, Yale University.

New Appointments

Walter Broadnax, dean, School of Public Affairs, American University; formerly, director, Bureau of Government Research, University of Maryland.

Anna Grzymala Busse, assistant professor, department of political science, Yale University.

Sandra J. Clancy, assistant professor, department of political science, Stonehill College.

Erik A. Devereaux, executive director, Association for Public Policy Analysis; formerly, Carnegie Mellon University.

Alana S. Jeydel, assistant professor, department of history and political science, York College (PA).

Tom Kazee, dean and professor of political science, University of the South; formerly, Davidson College.

John Kingdon, Welling Professor, Columbian School of Arts and Sciences, George Washington University; formerly, retired from University of Michigan and sailing the upper Chesapeake.

John Lapinski, assistant professor, department of political science, Yale University.

Daniel A. Lindley III, assistant professor, department of government, University of Notre Dame.

Mark V. Nadel, associate commissioner, Social Security Administration, Office of Disability and Income Assistance Policy; formerly, U.S. General Accounting Office.

James Vreeland, assistant professor, department of political science, Yale University.

Promotions

Sammy Basu, associate professor with tenure, department of politics, Willamette University.

Charles Danneh, associate professor with tenure, department of political science, Bradley University.

Richard J. Ellis, professor, department of politics, Willamette University.

Tse-min Lin, associate professor, department of government, University of Texas, Austin.

Michael Marks, associate professor with tenure, department of politics, Willamette University.

David R. Mayhew, Sterling Professor of Political Science, Yale University.

Michael Minkenberg, professor of political science, Fachbereich Kulturwissenschaften, Europa-Universität Viadrina at Frankfurt (Oder); formerly, Center for European and North American Studies, University of Göttingen.

Shalendra Sharma, associate professor with tenure, department of politics, University of San Francisco.

Steven Skowronek, Peletiah Perit Professor of Political Science, Yale University.

Rogers Smith, Alfred Cowles Professor of Government, Yale University.

FOR THE RECORD

Michael X. Delli Carpini, most recently chair of the political science department at Barnard College, joined the Pew Charitable Trusts in early 1999 as director of public policy programs. A scholar specializing in American politics, public opinion research, and mass media, he is the author of four books, most recently What Americans Know About Politics and Why it Matters. He has also authored dozens of journal articles, essays, and panel papers on a wide variety of political and public policy topics.

He is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, where he earned a B.A. in English literature and a M.A. in political science. He was awarded his doctorate in political science from the University of Minnesota.

Stephen Zunes, associate professor, department of politics, University of San Francisco.

Awards

Fulbright Scholarship Board Names Graduate Student Winners

The J. William Fulbright Foreign Scholarship Board recently announced the names of the U.S. graduate students who received awards under the Fulbright Program. For a listing of those students in international relations, political science, and public administration please visit PSonline at www.apsanet.org/PS/.

Horowitz Foundation Selects Five Scholars as Recipients of Grants for Research in Social Policy

The Irving Louis Horowitz Foundation for Social Policy has named five scholars to receive its first research grants in the social sciences. Among the five winners are four political scientists:

Rossana Castiglioni, University of Notre Dame, Retrenchment versus Maintenance: The Politics of Welfare State Reform in Chile and Uruguay, 1973–1998.

Bruce G. Peabody, University of Texas, Austin, Recovering the Political Constitution: Changing Regimes of Nonjudicial Interpretation.

Daniel N. Lipson, University of Wisconsin, The New Politics of Affirmative Action: Reforming Admissions Policies in Public Universities.

Kim Michelle Williams, Cornell University, Boxed In: The United States Multiracial Movement.

The Horowitz Foundation offers a number of grants annually. Preference is given to projects that deal with contemporary issues in social sciences, or issues of policy relevance, and to scholars in the early

Allen Hertzke, Presidential Professor of Political Science at the University of Oklahoma, was named Outstanding Oklahoma Political Scientist for 1998. An authority on religion and politics, Hertzke's books include Representing God in Washington, Echoes of Discontent, and a coauthored textbook titled Religion and Politics.

Nelson Polsby, professor of political science at the University of California, Berkeley will end a ten-year term as director of the university's Institute of Governmental Studies in June. In his decade as director, he worked to create a community of scholars and students at one of Berkeley's oldest and best known research and public service institutes.

Thomas E. Mann, director of the Governmental Studies Program and W. Averell Harriman Fellow in American Governance at the Brookings Institution, received the National Capital Area Political Science Association 1999 Pi Sigma Alpha Award. The award recognizes a political scientist who has made a significant contribution to public affairs.

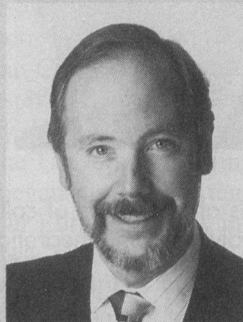

Bartholomew Sparrow was promoted to the rank of associate professor with tenure in department of government at the University of Texas, Austin. Sparrow is former winner of APSA's Leonard D. White Award for the best dissertation in public administration. He earned his Ph.D. from the University of Chicago.

Joyce Gelb, professor in the women's studies program at Hunter College, City University of New York, was a visiting professor in Yale University's department of political science during the spring semester of 1999. The visiting position was funded through a grant from the Social Science Research Council to study equal employment law in the U.S. and Japan.

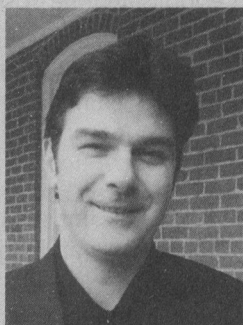

Reneé Johnson, assistant professor in the department of political science at the University of Florida, was awarded UF's University Teaching Improvement Program Award for 1998. A scholar of American politics, she earned her Ph.D. from SUNY-Stony Brook in 1997.

Robert J. Spitzer, Distinguished Service Professor in the department of political science at SUNY-Cortland, testified before the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee, Subcommittee on the Constitution, in September 1998 on the meaning of the Second Amendment.

Carolyn E. Cocca, a doctoral candidate in politics at New York University, received a New York State Archives Grant to complete research for "Regulating Adolescent Sexuality: Gender, Race, and Class in Statutory Rape Policies and Prosecutions—New York and California, 1948–98."

Stephen R. Gill, professor of political science at York University (Ontario), spent this past spring serving as Humana Visiting Professor at Centre College (KY). His research interests include political economy, world order, and global studies. He is coauthor (with D. Law) of The Global Political Economy.

George Lopez, professor in the department of government at the University of Notre Dame, has received awards from the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation and the United States Institute of Peace. His research focuses on gross violations of human rights and other forms of state violence, especially economic sanctions. His most recent work appears in two coedited volumes, Peace & Security: The Next Generation, and Political Gain and Civilian Pain.

stages of their professional careers. For more information, visit the APSA web site (www.apsanet.org/PS/grants/horowitz.html).

Other Awards

Kevin G. Barnhurst, associate professor, department of communications, University of Illinois, Chicago was named one of nine Great Cities Institute Faculty Scholars for academic year 1999–2000 by UIC. The scholars are released from teaching and committee work to undertake a large project involving study of Chicago using multi-method collaboration across disciplinary lines and international comparisons.

Leann Brown, department of political science, University of Florida, won the University Teaching Improvement Program Award.

Richard Conley, department of political science, University of Florida, received the university's College of Liberal Arts and Science Research Award.

Richard B. Finnegan, department of political science, Stonehill College, was awarded the Moreau Medal by the president of the college for his "distinguished contribution to the history of the college."

David Hedge, department of political science, University of Florida, was a winner of the university's College of Liberal Arts and Sciences Teaching Award for 1998.

Errol Henderson, department of political science, University of Florida, received the university's College of Liberal Arts and Sciences Research Award.

Samuel B. Hoff, department of history, political science, and philosophy, Delaware State University, has been named George Washington Distinguished Professor. The position, endowed by the Delaware State Society of the Cincinnati is a three-year appointment.

Chris Howard, assistant professor of government, College of William and Mary, has been awarded a Fellowship for College Teachers and Independent Scholars by the National Endowment for the Humanities. Howard has also won a fellowship from the American Council of Learned Societies. Both grants will enable him to research the politics of social policy in the American states during 1999–2000.

Amie Kreppel, department of political science, University of Florida, received the university's College of Liberal Arts and Sciences Research Award.

David Leege, professor, department of government, University of Notre Dame, received the James Burns, CSC, Award for contributions to graduate studies and research.

Melvin Richter, Hunter College, City University of New York, was presented with the medal of l'Académie de Bordeaux and made a Chevalier de l'Ordre des Artes et des Lettres of the French Republic.

David Rosenbloom, distinguished professor of public administration, American University, has been selected by the American Society of Public Administration to receive the Dwight Waldo Award for Outstanding Contributions to the Literature and Leadership of Public Administration through an Extended Career.

Richard Scher, department of political science, University of Florida, won the University Teaching Improvement Program Award.

Donnelly T. Studlar, Eberly Distinguished Professor of Political Science, West Virginia University, received the Outstanding Researcher of the Year award from his school's College of Arts and Sciences.

Raimo Vayrynen, department of government, University of Notre Dame, was awarded an honorary doctorate

KUDOS

Elinor Ostrom, Arthur F. Bentley Professor of Political Science, Indiana University, and a former president of the American Political Science Association, has been named the winner of the 1999 Johan Skytte Prize in Political Science. Awarded annually by the Skytte Foundation and the department of government of Uppsala University in Sweden to the scholar who in the view of the Foundation has made the most valuable contribution to political science, the prize is being given for the first time to a female scholar. The award announcement cites Ostrom's "profound empirical as well as theoretical analysis of the nature of collective action and rational choice" and her work involving game-theoretic models of environmental policy making.

Ostrom received her Ph.D. from UCLA in 1965 and took a position as a visiting assistant professor at Indiana in that year. She is currently co-director of Indiana's Workshop in Political Theory and Policy Analysis and holds dual appointments to the department of political science and School of Public and Environment Affairs. Her primary research interest has always been collective and collaborative decision and public policy making, with a specific focus on land use and resource allocation. Ostrom's recent publications include Governing the Commons: The Evolution of Institutions for Collective Action (Cambridge University Press, 1990); Rules, Games, and Common-Pool Resources, coauthored with Roy Gardner and James Walker (University of Michigan Press, 1994); and Local Commons and Global Interdependence: Heterogeneity and Cooperation in Two Domains, coedited with Robert Keohane (Sage, 1995).

As APSA president, Ostrom was instrumental in establishing the Task Force on Civic Education for the Next Century.

in social science by the University of Lapland in Finland.

Ken Wald, department of political science, University of Florida, was designated as the first William G. Carlton Commemorative Term Professor in the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences for 1998–99. Wald was also a recipient of the university's College of Liberal Arts and Sciences Teaching Award.

Philip Williams, department of political science, University of Florida, received the university's College of Liberal Arts and Sciences Research Award.