Science and Civilisation in China,
Volume IV, Part 1
JOSEPH NEEDHAM

Three volumes of Dr Needham's monumental work have already been published. The fourth, on the development of Chinese physics and physical technology, is divided into three parts. Part 1 deals with physics and especially with those branches most developed in China : optics, acoustics and magnetism. Part 2 will deal with mechanical engineering and Part 3 with civil engineering and nautics. Volume IV, Part 1 : 468 pages, 28 plates, 46 drawings, 84s. net

Some reviews of previous volumes :

'The importance of this work cannot be over-estimated. Nothing by Western writers on China comparable to it in richness of material and depth of insight has yet appeared. . . . Not only sinologists in the West but Chinese scholars themselves will find it of inestimable use for years to come.'

The Times Literary Supplement.

'Perhaps the greatest single act of historical synthesis and intercultural communication ever attempted by one man.'

Studies in honour of
PHILIP K. HITTI

EDITED BY
JAMES KRITZECK
AND
B. BAYLY WINDER

This volume brings together a number of essays on Islamic and Near Eastern subjects by distinguished scholars, as well as by relative newcomers in this field of study. Conceived as a tribute by his students and colleagues to the famous orientalist, Philip K. Hitti, the articles fall naturally into three divisions; Islam, the religion and its background; various important aspects of the mediaeval Islamic period and the modern and contemporary Near East. Of interest to scholars in the field, this work will also help the layman to understand the genius of the Islamic world in its mediaeval period of greatness and to appreciate some of the problems now besetting it with such intensity.
