Faith and Belief

WILFRED CANTWELL SMITH

While the various religious communities of the world have differed in belief, whether or not they have differed so markedly in faith is the question that Wilfred Cantwell Smith addresses in this book. In modern times, he argues, Western Christians have confused the distinctions between faith and belief. To clarify these distinctions and elucidate the philological and historical relations between them, Prof. Smith innovatively examines the nature of faith and belief as conceived in the Buddhist, Islamic, and Hindu traditions. He then studies the development of these concepts in Christianity, giving special reference to the Church Fathers, Aquinas, and the modern period. $18.50
