

lodged at the level of the cricoid cartilage than when lower down, as in the former position the presence of the tube invariably caused reflex movements, which are absent when this region has been passed. No bad after-effects were seen in any case from the use of the œsophagoscope, and unless the wall of the œsophagus had been damaged the patient was able to swallow solid food immediately after the removal of the foreign body. Œsophagoscopy is, therefore, not only the safest method that exists for diagnosing the presence of foreign bodies in the œsophagus, but also, under the guidance of the œsophagoscope, in by far the majority of cases a satisfactory removal of the foreign body may be secured.

Hammond, P.—Brain Abscess, Operation, Recovery. "Boston Med. and Surg. Journ.," January 25, 1906.

Male, aged forty. A straightforward case of temporo-sphenoidal abscess of otitic origin. Operation was carried out through the ear, and the abscess was drained by means of gauze by that route.

Crockett, E. A.—A Case of Acute Meningitis, Operation, Recovery. "Boston Med. and Surg. Journ.," January 25, 1906.

Female, age not stated. Right discharge from childhood. Nine months previous to consultation severe head pain, with mastoid tenderness. Second attack three months later, with nausea, vomiting, and vertigo. Nine weeks before consultation pain in ear and paracentesis attempted. Two days before admission severe headache and loss of consciousness, lasting twenty minutes. On admission she was semi-comatose, with nausea, vomiting, and severe occipital, frontal, and right parietal headache. Temperature 102° F. Double optic neuritis. Foul pus coming from right ear, which contained a large polypus. Operation was at once undertaken. Communication between middle ear and middle fossa was found, and on opening the dura mater pus could be seen on the vessels on the brain surface. Nothing was found on probing the brain. The cranial cavity was drained through the ear with gauze, and the patient made a rapid and uneventful recovery.

Hitz, H. B. (Milwaukee).—Double Mastoiditis complicated by an Intercommunicating suboccipital Abscess. "Arch. of Otol.," vol. xxxiv, No. 6.

Acute otitis in one ear called for the Schwartze operation, and pus disappeared, except from one spot on the floor of the tympanum. Stiffness of the neck appeared, and deep pressure caused the pus in the tympanum to well up. A suboccipital abscess of the Bezold variety was discovered and opened. During manipulation in the suboccipital region a discharge appeared in the opposite ear, and the abscess was found to communicate with both ears, the onset of the inflammation in the second ear having occurred without any of the classical symptoms.

THERAPEUTIC PREPARATIONS.

BURROUGHS WELLCOME & Co., London, Sydney, and Cape Town.

"Tabloid" "Xaxa" gr. 5 (0.324 gm.). "Xaxa" is a trade-mark name to designate acetyl-salicylic acid, issued by Burroughs Wellcome & Co.

Acetyl-salicylic acid appears to possess all the valuable therapeutic properties of salicylic acid and its salts, without unpleasant after-effects. Acetyl-salicylic acid is insoluble in the stomach, but readily soluble in the intestine, and therefore causes no gastric irritation. It may be used in any conditions in which salicylic acid or sodium salicylate is usually employed.

It has been found to be of great service in gout and rheumatism, especially in connection with the ear affections associated with these conditions. It is also of value in some forms of headache and neuralgia. It has been administered with success in chorea, pleurisy, glycosuria, eye diseases, and for pains of tabes dorsalis and disseminated sclerosis. It has also been given for the relief of pain following abdominal operations, and may be employed generally as an analgesic. Acetyl-salicylic acid, presented as "Tabloid" "Xaxa," readily disintegrates, and its therapeutic effect is promptly manifested. "Xaxa" contains no free salicylic acid.

One to three "Tabloid" "Xaxa" may be directed to be swallowed with water, plain or acidulated, twice or thrice daily, after food. For the relief of pain 15 grains may be prescribed as a first dose, with further doses, if necessary, of 10 grains at intervals of one hour to one hour and a half, until three or four doses in all have been taken.

"Tabloid" "Sodium Citrate" gr. 2 (0.13 gm.). Difficulties associated with the digestion of artificially prepared foods by infants frequently come under the notice of the medical practitioner. The necessary modification of cow's milk by dilution and sweetening to approximate human milk, is often inefficiently carried out by the mother or nurse. Consequently the infant may develop gastro-intestinal symptoms as a result of its inability to digest the food administered. The digestibility of cow's milk is greatly assisted by the addition of "Sodium Citrate." The explanation of the action which is commonly given is that the acid caseinogen and the calcium salts of milk in presence of the gastric juice form a thick casein clot. If "Sodium Citrate" be added to the milk, it combines with the caseinogen to form a sodium compound, less dense and more absorbable than the calcium caseinogen compound in the normal milk-clot. The calcium salts in the milk unite with the citric acid of the sodium citrate, and the resultant calcium citrate is diluted by the stomach contents and absorbed. Thus the introduction of sodium citrate increases the digestibility of cow's milk in a remarkable manner, allows the absorption of the calcium salts, and greatly enhances the food value of the milk. This method of treating milk is employed in all cases where there is reason to believe that the nourishment of the infant is unsatisfactory, and is of great value in cases of poor patients who cannot carry out more complicated instructions regarding the modification of cow's milk. It is indicated when the mother's milk does not suit the child, and also in the process of weaning. It is used to enable the amount of milk given in twenty-four hours to be increased. It is valuable in arresting or avoiding milk dyspepsia, and the rickety condition seen in many hand-fed children. The cheapness of this method of milk modification is a feature to be emphasised. It is directed that 1 to 2 grains or more of sodium citrate be given in each ounce of milk. One "Tabloid" product should be dissolved in about one drachm of water, and added as required to the milk. The product should not be added directly to the milk.
