Renford Bambrough

The Stanton Lectures of 1963 form the basis of this book. The author discusses and answers two common complaints about contemporary philosophy: that it lacks the scope and range of traditional metaphysical systems and that it has no relevance to life and morality. He outlines a comprehensive theory of knowledge and applies it to current and traditional problems about God and His transcendence, the objectivity of moral and religious enquiry, and about literature, morals, philosophy of life and their mutual connections.

CRISIS IN CONSCIOUSNESS

Robert Powell

This work follows logically upon the author's previous book Zen and Reality, in which he explained how Reality can only be discovered through self-knowing, but how certain pointers to this truth are to be found in the essence of Zen, and in the teaching of J. Krishnamurti. In Crisis in Consciousness he explores certain aspects of the spiritual life more fully and, leaving all teachings and external signposts behind, takes his readers on a journey of meditation—probing ever deeper into the Unknown. In the course of this inquiry, he makes some significant and far-reaching discoveries about the nature of Thought, Love, Life and Death.

Some Press Opinions:

"There is so much packed into this book that one can only recommend as many people as possible to read it and ponder the contents in their hearts . . .".—Tom Harris in The Middle Way.

"This book may in a sense be regarded as an extended commentary on the teachings of Krishnamurti, and indeed the author acknowledges his indebtedness. Unlike most other attempts, it is written in the same taut English in which Krishnamurti speaks, never using two words where one will do. For those who cannot take Krishnamurti 'neat', it is highly recommended".—L. C. Soper in The Theosophical Journal.

"Readers who have found release and refreshment through reading or listening to Krishnamurti will take to these pages with joy, since it is a clever exposition of what Krishnamurti meant, what the Buddha and Christ meant. . . This isn't an easy book in that Robert Powell has used thought to take us beyond thought. And we shall certainly not agree with all he says. But it is bracing and a challenge".—Science of Thought Review.

Moral Knowledge and its Methodology in Aristotle

J. Donald Monan

This book analyses Aristotle's changing conceptions of moral knowledge through the Protrepticus, the Nicomachean Ethics, and the Eudemian Ethics. The author departs significantly from the interpretations of Jaeger, Düring and Gauthier in his reading of Aristotle's ex professo theorizing on moral knowledge. Aristotle's most mature view of the supreme good he finds, in the Eudemian Ethics, justified by a method that foreshadows those nowadays in favour. 38/- net

The Concept of the Categorical Imperative

A Study of the Place of the Categorical Imperative in Kant's Ethical Theory

T. C. Williams

Mr Williams seeks to clarify the central concept of Kant's ethical theory, that the categorical imperative is the supreme principle of morality. It is his purpose to establish that the doctrine is not a mere 'tissue of patent whimsies' as has so often been assumed, but is a position of sound common sense. 32/- net

Nietzsche: The Will to Power

A new translation by Walter Kaufmann and R. J. Hollingdale. Edited, with commentary, by Walter Kaufmann

Comparable with the notebooks of Kafka, Camus and Wittgenstein, The Will to Power offers a glimpse into the workshop and mind of one of the greatest 19th century thinkers. Compiled from the notebooks Nietzsche kept during his most productive years, it represents a cross-section of his philosophy, full of epigrams and brilliant formulations, in an arrangement that enables the reader to find what Nietzsche wrote on nihilism, art, morality, religion or the theory of knowledge

Analytical Philosophy of Knowledge

ARTHUR C. DANTO

Professor Danto is particularly concerned with the problematic distinction between language and the world and our knowledge of the truths of both. When this distinction and the importance of the area between words and the world are fully appreciated it is possible to frame a plausible theory of knowledge free from the standard scepticisms.

All human beings are potentially moral agents. Professor Puccetti examines the possibility that all moral agents are not necessarily human beings.

by

JAMES K. FEIBLEMAN

Tulane University

1967. XI, 325 pp.

Cloth. $10.75 (postage included)

Some of the critics:

THE REVIEW OF METAPHYSICS

"This vast comprehensive effort proposes a new and complete theory of ethics . . ."

SIR MALCOLM KNOX

"Of all your books . . . MORAL STRATEGY is the one I like best and from which I have learned the most. It is a really original work on ethics . . . You have broken new ground with your individual, society, species, cosmos . . ."

PROFESSOR HERBERT W. SCHNEIDER in RELIGIOUS HUMANISM

"This treatise is an up-to-date presentation of the moral life and of a moral ideal preached by other, and even ancient humanists . . . Feibleman's emphasis on 'moral strategy' strikes me as an excellent concept for the exploration of the moral life".
