THE MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT, THE EXECUTIVE AND SCIENTIFIC POLICY

by

AUSTEN ALBU, M.P.

Recent discussions about the relations of science and government have treated parliament as non-existent. In this article, the Chairman of the Parliamentary and Scientific Committee discusses among other questions the influence which parliament has on the shaping of science policy and how it can play a larger part. He compares the situation in Britain with the role of the American Congress in the making of science policy.
