An intensive, nationwide effort to combat the mounting shortage of teachers in the nation's colleges has been inaugurated with the announcement by the Ford Foundation of a $25 million appropriation for a large-scale extension and development of the National Woodrow Wilson Fellowship Program.

The Foundation's action will support a broad program to attract able college students into the academic profession and will provide graduate fellowships to potential college teachers at the rate of 1,000 a year for the next five years.

Individual awards, which will be applied to tuition and living expenses for the first year of graduate study, are expected to average $2,200 and will require approximately $11 million of the total appropriation. Another $10 million will go to universities for aid to graduate students beyond the first year. A nationwide recruiting program will absorb about $2.8 million, and administrative expenses over the five-year period are expected to be $1 million.

Out of the total funds appropriated, $200,000 will be made available to the Association of American Universities and its affiliate, the Association of Graduate Schools, to provide for an immediate increase of 100 Woodrow Wilson fellowships for the fall of 1957—a fifty per cent rise over the 200 awarded this spring. The $200,000 will be paid to the University of Michigan as fiscal agent. The present national headquarters of the organization are in Ann Arbor, Michigan.

Spencer Albright, University of Richmond, will teach in the summer school at Emory University.

William Anderson of the University of Minnesota, following his retirement from teaching in June, 1957, plans to devote his time and efforts to a comprehensive study of The History, Theory, and Practice of the Study of Politics. To assist him in this project he has received a three year grant from the Ford Foundation.

Under the heading "the study of politics" he means to include every significant attempt, and especially every organized one, to advance human knowledge in the field.

The historical account will be undertaken first. Although Professor Anderson has for a number of years been developing the history of the subject in connection with his Scope and Methods course, and has accumulated a considerable body of historical materials, he is conscious of some serious gaps in the records he has. He feels that many items that others might consider important for his purposes may have escaped him. This may be especially true in the medieval period. Furthermore, there probably are unpublished items like masters' and doctors' theses that are not always catalogued, and are not caught up in standard guides and indexes, and of which he is, therefore, not aware.

He would, therefore, be happy to learn from anyone about any pertinent materials that might help him to round out the historical survey, from ancient times to the present. He would be especially glad to learn about other scholars, here or abroad, who may be working in any part of the field. Correspondence is invited. Address him at the Department of Political Science, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis 14, Minn.
