Cargill Going Global

WAYNE G. BROEHL, JR.

"An outstanding book and must reading for business managers, educators, students, and public policy leaders who have an interest in the global value added food system—the largest sector of the world economy. Broehl has provided his readers with an understanding of the complexity and volatility of the global food system and the unique coordinating role Cargill has played in enabling this industry to adjust to the inevitable swings from food surpluses to food shortages. This study of the largest privately owned firm in the world provides insights into the interdependence of management leadership, public policy providers, and the growth and development of a very special firm. Firms such as Cargill are determining the future structure of the global food system and the system's ability to provide for the nutritional needs of society in a safe, efficient, and economically sound manner."

—RAY A. GOLDBERG, Harvard University Graduate School of Business Administration

"Broehl has already provided Cargill: Trading the World's Grain (1992) . . . With the same scholarly treatment, he takes up here where he left off with his earlier Cargill history. Broehl covers the years beginning with 1960, when the company was headed for the first time by someone other than a Cargill family member. Erwin Kelm ran Cargill for 17 years, and Broehl details his tenure. During this period, a new management team was installed, and the company celebrated its centennial, increased trade worldwide, and came under government scrutiny. This book will not only benefit business history and agriculture collections but also be of interest to commodity traders and speculators."

MAURY KLEIN

"Soundly researched, perceptively focused, and persuasively argued. Maury Klein writes beautifully. His prose is clear, crisp, and lively and flows with that deceptively effortless ease that we all wish for."

—CHARLES W. CHEAPE, Loyola College

"Klein has written much of the best railroad history we have . . . Each of these essays is a pleasure to read, and each makes a significant contribution to our understanding of the railroad as an artifact of American business and cultural history."

—Journal of Economic History

"The nation's foremost historian of railroads has gathered an extraordinary collection of his essays: they are authoritative and engrossing."

—H. ROGER GRANT, University of Akron

GUIDELINES FOR CONTRIBUTORS

GENERAL INFORMATION

Manuscripts are considered for publication on the understanding that they are not concurrently under consideration elsewhere and that the material—in substance as well as form—has not been previously published.

Three copies of the manuscript should be submitted.

Authors should identify themselves only on a separate title page that provides name, mailing address, and telephone number. Authors must also remember not to identify themselves in the body of the manuscript; specifically, references to their own work in the text should be in the third person, and citations should be written without possessive pronouns—not “See my”

Potential contributors should initially submit hard copy, not diskettes, but it will save considerable work for all parties in the event of acceptance if authors follow a few rules from the beginning:

- In general, use as few formatting commands as possible.
- Left justify text.
- Do not hyphenate words at the end of lines.
- ALL material—including extracted quotations and notes—must be double spaced.
- Notes should be numbered consecutively and citations should be placed as footnotes or endnotes formatted as indicated by The Chicago Manual of Style (1993).
- Each table and figure must be accompanied by a complete source.

Each article should be accompanied by an abstract of 75–100 words outlining the main point(s) of the paper and placing the article in context. Subheads should be used to divide the manuscript into three or four sections (or more, depending on length). We do not have an upper or lower page limit, but articles usually run between 25 and 50 typescript pages, including notes and other material.

We are always eager to publish illustrations, but authors should not include originals of illustrative materials at the time of submission; photocopies of such material may be included. Authors are responsible for obtaining all illustrative materials and permissions for reproduction, and for writing captions.

Authors of accepted manuscripts will receive two copies of the issue in which the article appears, and twenty-five free offprints.

MANUSCRIPT PREPARATION

We use the 14th edition of The Chicago Manual of Style (1993) and spell and hyphenate words according to Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary.

The journal encourages authors to use gender-neutral prose in all cases where it is not anachronistic to do so; male nouns and pronouns should not be used to refer to people of both sexes. We use the day-month-year form for dates, as 11 February 1998. Double quotation marks should be used for journal titles and direct quotation; single quotation marks are used for quoted material inside quotations.

SAMPLE CITATION FORMS

Book: Alfred D. Chandler, Jr., The Visible Hand: The Managerial Revolution in American Business (Cambridge, Mass., 1977), 321-22.

Journal: Charles Cheape, “Not Politicians but Sound Businessmen: Norton Company and the Third Reich,” Business History Review 62 (Autumn 1988): 444-66.

Note that we do not include the publisher in book citations. We do not use loc. cit., op. cit., or idem., but ibid. (not italicized) may be used.
