THE LORD'S SUPPER ACCORDING TO THE NEW TESTAMENT

by Eduard Schweizer

In the varying accounts of the Lord's Supper, what goes back to Jesus and what originated in the early church? In examining these accounts, the author, an internationally known New Testament scholar, concludes that the Lucan verses, with their eschatological perspective, contain the more or less genuine report, while the "words of institution" derive from the early church.

THE PSALMS

A Form-Critical Introduction

by Hermann Gunkel

Study of the Psalms entered a new era when Hermann Gunkel, the "father of form criticism," classified the various psalms according to the place they once occupied in Israelite life and worship. Here, for the first time in English, is Gunkel's pioneer analysis, which defined the literary categories still generally employed by students of the Psalms today.

IMAGES OF RELIGION IN AMERICA

by Jerald C. Brauer

Drawing upon the accounts of outstanding European observers of the American scene the author gives an outsider's view of religion in America from 1837 to 1923. The two key motifs which dominate the impressions of these outsiders were, one, the separation of church and state, and, two, its surprisingly healthful consequences.

THE PROTESTANT QUEST FOR A CHRISTIAN AMERICA 1830-1930

by Robert T. Handy

The Protestant attempt to Christianize American society during the nineteenth century was frustrated by two factors. First, the seriousness with which the churches tried to meet and influence society tended to make them absorb the characteristics of those they served. Second, American culture became increasingly less homogeneous after the Civil War.

THE FORMATION OF THE AMERICAN CATHOLIC MINORITY 1820-1860

by Thomas T. McAvoy

This study in the history of American Catholicism develops the thesis that the dominant form of the Catholic minority was shaped in the four decades prior to the Civil War. McAvoy shows how the several waves of Irish and German immigration introduced political, social, and economic patterns of divergence into American Catholicism.

A CRITICAL PERIOD IN AMERICAN RELIGION 1875-1900

by Arthur M. Schlesinger, Sr.

This essay depicts the situation of American Christianity in the last quarter of the nineteenth century. Schlesinger observes the impact made by Darwinianism, biblical criticism, and the growing importance of the comparative study of religion.

KIERKEGAARD AND RADCIAL DISCIPLESHIP
A New Perspective

VERNARD ELLER

In order to show that Kierkegaard's religious thought is essentially that of classic Protestant sectarianism, Vernard Eller measures Kierkegaard against a typical sect, the Brethren, and compares their writings on such topics as the importance of the individual and his relation to God, the role of reason in religion, and the problem of freedom of the will.

ABINGDON PRESS

Geneva and the Consolidation of the French Protestant Movement, 1564-1572

A Contribution to the History of Congregationalism, Presbyterianism, and Calvinist Resistance Theory

By Robert M. Kingdon

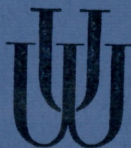

From his study of manuscripts and rare books, some of which were only recently made available, Mr. Kingdon offers an analysis and evaluation of fresh information about the two major problems which dominated Protestant activity in France from the time of John Calvin's death in 1564 to the eruption of the St. Bartholomew's Day massacre in 1572.

The problem of how the Reformed Church should be organized resulted in the first consideration of the relative merits of "congregational" and "presbyterian" church polity. The question of how the Reformed Church should deal with the French state in order to achieve religious toleration was less peaceably resolved. One faction in the Church was prepared to endure bitter persecution, but the other group wanted to wage war against the state and twice plunged France into civil war, until the massacres of Protestants in 1572 nearly wiped out the movement in many parts of France.

Robert M. Kingdon is Professor of History at the University of Wisconsin and author of Geneva and the Coming of the Wars of Religion in France, 1555-1563 (Geneva: Droz, 1956), to which the book is a sequel. $8.00
