Tanzania 1800–1980

A Political Economy
Andrew Coulson

This book is an analysis of contemporary Tanzania: Ujamaa villages, education for self-reliance, nationalization, and other policies that made Tanzania in the late 1960s the country in Africa most noticeably committed to Socialist policies. But by the end of the 1970s voluntary ujamaa villages had been replaced by compulsory 'planned' villages, and the nationalizations had spawned ever-increasing government and parastatal bureaucracies without corresponding increases in production. In this book these policies are interpreted in the light of what came before, in the colonial and pre-colonial periods. It is written for a non-specialist readership, and yet it also includes many insights that will make it compulsive reading for administrators, economists, historians, agriculturalists – indeed almost anyone involved in the process of development. £15 paperback £6.95

Migration in West Africa

The Demographic Aspects
K. C. Zachariah and Julien Condé

Here is a descriptive study of the international, internal and rural-urban migration in Togo, Ghana, the Ivory Coast, Upper Volta, Liberia, Sierra Leone, Gambia, Mali, and Senegal. For several of these countries the census from which the authors gather their material is the first ever conducted, and therefore much of the national level demographic data used is entirely new. The first section examines the regional aspects and the second focuses on specific countries. The principle objective of the study is to analyse the newly available data concerning migration, and to reinterpret data previously collected. £10.50 paperback £4.50 World Bank

The Contribution of the Courts to Government

A West African View
A. N. E. Amisshah

This book is a personal appreciation of the contribution of the courts to the governance of a state, with particular reference to the courts of anglophone Africa. It begins with a general analysis of the role of the courts, and illustrates the relationship of the courts to the executive and legislature by drawing on material from diverse systems. The author takes as a case study the first fifteen years of independent Ghana, to illustrate the problems arising out of the discharge of the courts' functions. £22.50

South African Politics

Leonard Thompson and Andrew Prior

Since South Africa not only possesses the most powerful industrial economy in the African continent, but is also heavily armed and capable of producing nuclear weapons, its future affects us all. This book is a complete, succinct, and up-to-date discussion of how power operates within South Africa's unique political system viewed in its complex historical, demographic, economic, and international contexts.

Cloth £17.50 Paper £4.15

Ideology and Development in Africa

Crawford Young

In this provocative book, a leading Africanist analyses representative African states in order to answer the question: What role have the different political ideologies of these regimes played in their economic, societal, and foreign policy development?

A Council on Foreign Relations Book £19.95

John X. Merriman

Paradoxical South African Statesman

Phyllis Lewsen

Merriman, the most influential liberal English statesman in the Cape Colony and its last prime minister, was active in South African politics for more than half a century before his death in 1926. The first comprehensive biography of this controversial man shows that he was an advocate for civil rights, an orator and parliamentarian, and an incomparable writer of political correspondence.

THE JOURNAL OF MODERN AFRICAN STUDIES

The Journal offers a quarterly survey of politics, economics, and related topics in contemporary Africa.

The main emphasis is upon the peoples and policies, the problems and progress of this dynamic and disparate continent; upon the many societies that are evolving rather than the essential characteristics of the old; upon the present, not on the more distant past. The best current work is sought from specialists in different academic disciplines, whose contributions can illuminate and cross-fertilise one another.

The Journal seeks to promote a deeper understanding of what is happening in Africa today. It is intended for both the political scientist and the practical politician, the administrator and the advocate, the economist and the educator, the banker and the business man, the diplomat and the technocrat, the civil servant and the nationalist leader. All have something to contribute to these pages and, it is hoped, much to learn from them.

Editorial policy avoids commitment to any political viewpoint or ideology, whether imperialism, pan-Africanism, capitalism, socialism, or nationalism. Such concepts, however, have relevance to the modern African situation, and merit serious discussion, often from several different points of view, in order that controversial issues may be fairly examined.
