
Simplicity

Elliott Sober

Simplicity is often cited as a compelling factor in deciding which of several competing theories it is most reasonable to believe. Yet both the nature of simplicity and the justification for using simplicity as a criterion for belief remain unclear. Professor Sober attempts to solve these problems by first defining a concept of informativeness. He then argues that simplicity is informativeness, and shows that this theory illuminates our intuitive judgements about the simplicity of a variety of hypotheses. £6.50 Clarendon Library of Logic and Philosophy

Mind and Language

Wolfson College Lectures 1974

Edited by Samuel Guttenplan

The abilities to think and to use language are not independent of one another. Only in the twentieth century has it come to be seen that an acceptable account of the nature of this interdependency, while involving the results of the empirical sciences of psychology and linguistics, must be primarily philosophical. The issues surrounding this question are thus among the most important and characteristic of philosophy today, and the seven essays presented here provide a useful starting-point for its solution. £4.25

Values and Evaluations

Z. Najder

The author attempts to establish a conceptual bridge between evaluations as studied by philosophers and evaluative behaviour as described by social scientists and historians. The system of analytic concepts he proposes is intended to render the philosophy of value, not axiologically neutral, but useful in analysing and justifying a choice of values: to help men in becoming aware of the knowledge they possess. Paper covers £4.50

Essays in Semantics

Edited by Gareth Evans and John McDowell

Most of the papers in this volume bear upon the general question 'What is the nature of an acceptable theory of meaning?', taking as their starting point an answer proposed by Donald Davidson. The remaining papers are attempts to work out the implications of suggested answers to this general question, or to solve semantical problems in accordance with them. £9.50

Wittgenstein on Philosophy and the Metaphysics of Experience

P. M. S. Hacker

The central theme of this book is Wittgenstein's metaphysics of experience, which is concerned with selfconsciousness, knowledge of other minds and of objects. The secondary theme is Wittgenstein's general conception of philosophy and metaphysics, which illuminates, and is illuminated by, the examination of his metaphysics of experience. The two main subjects are examined against the background of Wittgenstein's semantic theories. £1.75

Aristotle's Posterior Analytics

Translated with notes by Jonathan Barnes

The Posterior Analytics contains some of Aristotle's most influential thought in logic, epistemology, metaphysics, and the philosophy of science. The first book expounds and develops the notions of a demonstrative argument and of a formal, axiomatized science: the second discusses a cluster of problems raised by the axioms or principles of such a science, and investigates in particular the theory of definition. £7 paper covers £3 Clarendon Aristotle Series

Plato: Phaedo

Translated with notes by David Gallop

The Phaedo provides one of the best introductions to Plato's philosophy, especially to the thought of his 'middle period'. Its central subject is the question of immortality. This is made the focus of a subtle treatment of many diverse topics, as well as such well-known Platonic themes as Recollection and the Theory of Forms. £6 paper covers £2.50 Clarendon Plato Series

Plato: Philebus

Translated with notes by J. C. B. Gosling

The Philebus is Plato's most extensive treatment of hedonism. It also contains procedural recommendations that have variously been seen as supplying evidence for the content of the final theory of Forms, and for the abandonment of that theory. An interpretation is here offered which both makes these passages as nearly as possible consistent and enables one to see more clearly the unified strategy of the dialogue. £6 paper covers £2.25

ON THE SEVERAL SENSES OF BEING IN ARISTOTLE

Franz Brentano

Translated by Rolf George

Franz Brentano (1838–1917) exerted an extraordinary influence upon the development of philosophy. His many distinguished pupils included Meinong, Husserl, and Freud, and the present work, Brentano's doctoral dissertation, awakened Heidegger's interest in philosophy. Brentano saw himself as an intimate disciple of Aristotle. In this volume he pursues Aristotle's discussion of the several senses of "being". He finds that (in Aristotle's view) being in the sense of the categories, in particular substantial being, is the most basic; all other modes, potential and actual being, being in the sense of true, and other senses, stand to it in a relation of well-founded analogy. Many of Brentano's mature views are prepared in this work. The translation is not meant to be a book for specialists. Greek and Latin quotations have been brought into English to make the work accessible to all philosophers who wish to meditate on this profoundest of philosophical problems. The translation is one of several authorized by the Franz Brentano Foundation.

FRIEDRICH NIETZSCHE AND THE POLITICS OF TRANSFIGURATION

Tracy B. Strong

In his examination of Nietzsche's philosophic doctrines which have implications for political theory, Mr. Strong focuses on Nietzsche's claim that Western culture, in all its aspects, is coming to an end. He first investigates Nietzsche's general view of society and culture, and then examines what Nietzsche called the "politics of virtue". These chapters deal with the structure of language and of Western conceptual patterns, with the structure and nature of moral interactions, and with the source of these problems which Nietzsche saw as inherent in Western morality. The author next provides an extended analysis of Nietzsche's consideration of ancient Greece, followed by an account of Nietzsche's views on specifically political matters. The later part of the volume focuses on two basic Nietzschean concepts: the will to power; and eternal return. Mr. Strong proposes a new understanding of the will to power and attempts to show precisely what its relation might be to a new revaluation of values. He also describes a new conception of the doctrine of eternal return which permits an entirely new appreciation of the question of Nietzsche's so-called "racism" and of his "Lamarckianism".
