Heart Burial

By CHARLES A. BRADFORD, F.S.A. 8s. 6d.

As a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of London of over thirty years' standing, the author has devoted his leisure from boyhood to the study of the past, writing from time to time papers of an historical and topographical nature.

The present volume is an attempt to trace the real rise, progress and decline of an important custom not yet extinct, but inadequately explained.

It is an essay and a collection of notes describing the ancient custom of the division of the human body at death and the separate disposal of its parts, as illustrated by cases within the London postal area.

The notes on special cases of heart burial, which constitute the greater part of the book, range from the twelfth century to the twentieth, from Henry II to Thomas Hardy.

Primitive Arts and Crafts

An Introduction to the Study of Material Culture

By R. U. SAYCE

Crown 8vo. With 60 text-figures. 8s. 6d. net

This book is similar to Professor Gordon Childe's The Bronze Age and Mr M. C. Burkitt's Our Early Ancestors, and is intended to give a general idea of the trend of thought amongst those who are studying the more material sides of primitive cultures. The author points out that no side of a culture can be properly understood without some knowledge of the other aspects of the people's life—such as religion and social organization. While he has tried to indicate the nature of the latest work on the subject, he has at the same time kept the treatment quite general, so as to indicate as fairly as possible the scope of the subject, and in order that the book may serve as an introduction which is quite intelligible to beginners.
