(Max-Planck-Institute, Heidelberg, West Germany), editors

1989. xvi + 691 pages. ISBN 0-89925-379-2. Cloth $139.00

This collection contains international treaties as well as other substantive regulations of the international economy. The material is arranged in two main sections, the first of which deals with institutions and co-operation, the second contains the most prominent examples of how substantive regulation of the international economy has been achieved. The volume gives an overview of the means of co-operation developed by states in order to find common and appropriate solutions for the increasingly complex and challenging problems of international economic exchange. The focus here is on international organizations which are the core of an international system of economic co-operation. The most conspicuous examples of regional co-operation are included. International trade is represented by GATT and selected agreements and decisions of the Tokyo and Uruguay Rounds. Further Documents relate to transborder activities of corporations, anti-trust law, and international transport.

The collection is oriented towards decision-makers on the international and national levels. The needs of those who are interested in the world economy from an academic point of view are taken into account. The selection takes a universal, not a national or regional, perspective.

INTERNATIONAL LAW AND THE CANADIAN COURTS

by Edward M. Morgan

This publication was prepared for law practitioners with international clients. It provides a clear and deep understanding of how Canadian courts deal with international law matters.

The author explores the often contradictory nature of the case law. He seeks to expose the underlying principles which guide the domestic courts when confronted with questions of international law.

The work covers four distinct fields of Canadian substantive and jurisdictional law:

- Sovereign Immunity
- Criminal Jurisdictions
- Alien's Rights
- Taxation Powers

Plus a detailed analysis of the case law and statutory provisions in each of these four areas.

UNCITRAL ARBITRATION MODEL IN CANADA

edited by Robert K. Paterson & Bonita J. Thompson, Q.C.

World experts analyze the state of international arbitration in this collection of papers presented for the British Columbia International Arbitration Centre.

The variety of contributors, ranging from academic experts to arbitration practitioners from several countries, provides an interesting diversity of perspectives and practical information. American practitioners will find the practical aspects useful in the wake of the Free Trade Agreement with Canada.

The book is divided into three parts:

Part I — Examines the various methods of solving trans-national disputes.

Part II — Describes the arbitration laws and policies of key Pacific Rim countries.

Part III — Focuses on the developing Canadian profile in the field, and in particular, on the landmark British Columbia legislation — its development, implementation, scope and design.

Plus! — 8 appendices providing the text of all the legislation discussed throughout the work.

INTERNATIONAL PROTECTION OF THE ENVIRONMENT

edited by

BERND RUSTER

Attorney at Law; Lecturer in International
Environmental Law, University of Munich

BRUNO SIMMA

Director of the Institute of International Law,
University of Munich

Within the last decade, international law concerning the protection of the environment has proliferated beyond all expectations. International Protection of the Environment is the most comprehensive collection of international documents in existence and is the key to any present or future research on what is rapidly becoming the issue of the 90's.

Originally published between 1975 and 1983 in thirty-one volumes covering international environment law from the late 18th century to about 1980, the set is now continuing in a looseleaf format to keep up-to-date with the pace of regulations on international environmental law. The documentation in both the clothbound collection and now in the looseleaf binders embraces all areas of environment law, including pollution control and international measures for the conservation of the natural and cultural environment. Within each subject area the documents are organized according to their legal characteristics.

"More recently, international law-making in the area of the environment appears to have started moving away from peripheral matters towards tackling the real core issues. It is regrettable that it took so many man-made disasters of ghastly proportions and consequences before international environment law really got serious."

Dr. C. F. Amerasinghe

Executive Secretary of the World Bank Administrative Tribunal

This book examines the local remedies rule in modern international law generally and also in the area of human rights protection. The law is presented in the light of State practice and the jurisprudence of international courts and tribunals.

The author not only discusses the jurisprudential basis of the rule and its established aspects but ventures into some important areas, such as the incidence of the rule, limitations, the burden of proof, and the application of the rule to procedural remedies, in which the law is not so clear. While there is a strict adherence to the requirements of juristic exposition and analysis where the law has been more or less determined, the author does not hesitate to offer criticisms and to make suggestions for improvement of the law in the light of modern policy considerations. The book takes into account the recent work on the subject by the International Law Commission which has not hitherto been examined.

There is also an appendix on the relevance of the rule to the law relating to international organizations.

MIXED INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION

STUDIES IN ARBITRATION BETWEEN STATES AND PRIVATE PERSONS

Stephen J. Toope

This book focuses on the process of arbitration between States and private persons. On the basis of an examination of this process – particularly the manner through which tribunals are created and by which they render judgment – the author assesses the role of the parties, the relative importance of their interests, the sources of law and the role of the adjudicator.

Part One is an exploration of some central difficulties, both theoretical and practical, that arise in mixed international arbitration. In the forefront of these is the question of the applicable law and particularly the question of the delocalisation of both the procedural and the substantive law. Also examined is the attempt to achieve the stabilization of State contracts. The recognition and enforcement of mixed arbitral awards is studied in detail, with special emphasis on the regime of the New York Convention. Finally, consideration is given to the remedies provided by mixed international arbitral tribunals, with close attention being paid to awards of lost future profits as well as to conservatory measures.

Part Two contains extensive studies of the three most important regimes of mixed international arbitration currently in operation: – the International Chamber of Commerce, the World Bank Centre for the Settlement of Investment Disputes and the Iran-US Claims Tribunal.

The book will be of special interest to practitioners of all forms of international commercial arbitration and also to international lawyers interested in questions of dispute resolution. As a general survey of the subject, the work will be invaluable to students.

The author: Dr Stephen J. Toope, AB (Harvard), BCL/LL.B (McGill), Ph.D (Cantab), is a member of the Faculty of Law and an Associate of the Institute of Comparative Law of McGill University.

This work is published under the auspices of the Research Centre for International Law, University of Cambridge.
